CHAPTER I.

IN the admonition entitled Concerning the Service of the Church which succeeds if indeed it does not rather form a part of the preface to the present book of Common Prayer of the reformed church of England, we find the following :—

“And whereas heretofore there hath been great diversity in saying and singing in churches within this realm; some following Salisbury use, some Hereford use, and some the use of Bangor, some of York, some of Lincoln; now from henceforth all the whole realm shall have but one use.”

In this passage the word heretofore does not relate to the time immediately preceding the last review of the common Prayer book in 1662, for during more than one hundred years (with the exception of the period of the rebellion and the ascendancy of presbyterians and independents) there had been only one use of saying and singing in English parish churches. We must go back to the beginning of the reign of queen Elizabeth, and beyond that again to the year 1549, when the first book of king Edward the sixth having been approved by convocation was put forth and enjoined by the authority of the parliament and the crown. We find in the preface to that book almost word for word the same injunction or admonition.

CHAPTER I.

IN the admonition entitled Concerning the Service of the Church which succeeds if indeed it does not rather form a part of the preface to the present book of Common Prayer of the reformed church of England, we find the following :—

In this passage the word heretofore does not relate to the time immediately preceding the last review of the common Prayer book in 1662, for during more than one hundred years (with the exception of the period of the rebellion and the ascendancy of presbyterians and independents) there had been only one use of saying and singing in English parish churches. We must go back to the beginning of the reign of queen Elizabeth, and beyond that again to the year 1549, when the first book of king Edward the sixth having been approved by convocation was put forth and enjoined by the authority of the parliament and the crown. We find in the preface to that book almost word for word the same injunction or admonition.

So, the "Act for the uniformity of publick prayers, and administering the sacraments and other rites and ceremonies, &c. in the church of England" (14 Car. II.) begins: "Whereas in the first year of the late queen Elizabeth, there was one uniform order of common service and prayer, and of the administration of the sacraments, rites, and ceremonies of the church of England." And the act alluded to, the first of Elizabeth, refers in like manner to the last year of Edward the sixth, declaring that then also there was "one uniform order." These statutes, we may therefore say, recognise the previous existence of various allowed forms or uses.

There are certainly some who very imperfectly understand what is meant by these old uses of the church of England; they have often remarked the passage which I have quoted from the preface to the Prayer book, and would be glad to learn something about it.¹ Wheatley and Shepherd, authors generally appealed to, pass over without remark "the Preface:" the latter however² in his introduction does say that "it is deserving of notice, that hitherto there had not been in England any one service established by public authority for the general use of the church. In the southern parts of the island the offices according to the use of Sarum, and in the northern those of York, were generally followed. In south Wales the offices of Hereford were adopted, and in north Wales those of Bangor," &c.: and so he passes on. Nor does Dr. Nicholls in his commentary make any remark

upon the passage. Bishop Mant in his selection of what he calls "notes" upon the common Prayer has referred to Sparrow and Dr. Burn, who give no further information upon the subject; except indeed that Osmund, bishop of Salisbury about the year 1070, was the compiler of the use of Sarum.

There are many, again, who are better informed but yet have never had an opportunity of examining any copies of the old service books which still exist, whether from living at a distance from public libraries or from some other cause. Nearly forty years ago [1844] in the preface to the first edition of this volume I said my hope was, upon a consideration of the circumstances which I have briefly spoken of above, that an attempt to render accessible these books or portions of them would not be unacceptable. Let me now add [1882], I trust without presumption, that my expectations have been amply realised.

I have alluded to the difficulty of obtaining access to these old books. So rare are they that except in the libraries of the universities of Oxford and Cambridge, and the British museum, it is almost hopeless to expect to find them. Occasionally, in a few instances, we may meet with a single volume, a horæ, or a manual, or it may be even a missal: but one book only will do but little for the student; if he wishes to understand the subject, and to obtain more than a mere smattering of knowledge about it, it can be only after a careful examination and comparison of the many volumes among which anciently the offices of the church of England were distributed.

There are better reasons even than the fact of rarity for making an effort to republish, in some form or other, either all or parts of the old books.

Of late years the demand for them has increased tenfold, and their price has naturally increased with the demand; so as to put them, when they do occur, beyond the reach of men who are nevertheless the most anxious to obtain them. This has been one result of a return to a more sound theological study than had characterised the clergy of an age, which has been emphatically and most justly styled by a late bishop of the diocese of Salisbury³ in his visitation charge "an unlearned age." And it could not but be so: for a chief object of enquiry, when men began to awake to the need of knowing something of the history, doctrines, and ritual of the middle ages, certainly would be into the faith and practice, into the observances and the worship of their church, before as well as since the sixteenth century. In the pursuit of this, they would be no longer content to rely upon garbled extracts or the unfounded representations of ignorant and prejudiced or slanderous historians.⁴

Before the reformation the public offices of the church of England were not contained, as they now are, in one volume but in many: they were perfectly distinct from each other, and intended for different purposes. There seems to be no necessity to supply here a description of these numerous books, as I have examined at considerable length the whole subject in a dissertation prefixed to another work, the Monumenta ritualia. It must therefore be sufficient to refer the reader there, and extract one passage only from an edition of a Portiforium secundum usum Sarum, published by Grafton and Whitchurch in 1544. This has at the beginning a privilege and licence of the king under his great seal to those printers, that they alone should print certain "bookes of devyne servyce, and praiser bookes, that is to say, the masse booke, y^e graile, the hymnal, the antiphoner, the processyonale, the manuel, the porteaus, and the prymer." Of these books the "masse booke" or the missal contained the rites and ceremonies and prayers to be used in the celebration of the holy communion. The graile or gradual contained, often with the notation also, the various introits, offertories, communions, gradualls, tracts, sequences, and other parts of the service. This volume was of course necessary for the more solemn performance of the liturgy in choir, and with the full attendance of the officiating priest and his subordinate ministers.

⁴ Attached to this passage in the first edition of "the ancient liturgy" was a note, specifying as an example a writer at that time still living, Mr. Hallam; and I allude to it because I see no reason for altering the opinion which I then expressed, though I do not think it necessary to repeat it. The place referred to is the second chapter of his Constitutional history of England.

Before we pass on, I propose first briefly to discuss what the meaning is of the term "use." Upon this question the chief difficulty seems to be how far, or if at all, we are to include the varieties also which unquestionably existed of music and chanting. How much of ceremonies and rites besides the bare words and order of the prayers ought to be included is another question and rests upon very different grounds: but as regards music, when we speak of the use of the church of Salisbury, or of the church of York, or Hereford, not only need we not include the chants, but rather, if we wish to be precise, altogether exclude the consideration of them.

It has been said upon the other hand by writers who take a different view, that the primary meaning of the passage from the preface to the Common Prayer book, before quoted, "Whereas heretofore," &c., is "with reference only to the various uses of plain-tune in the several cathedral choirs," and it has been doubted "whether there ever was a Lincoln use in any other sense than a different mode and practice of chanting."

When, however, we take up a missal according to the use of Sarum, and another of Hereford, and a third of York or Bangor, or again a breviary or a manual of Salisbury or York and compare them, we find most important and numerous variations. The notation may or may not be contained in them; very often of some portions it is, but subordinate and may or may not differ also. In many office books, the horæ for example, the notation is almost always omitted. As I have just said, there are numberless variations which constitute the use and distinguish the services of one church from those of another; viz. different prayers; different arrangements of them; different ceremonies to be observed in the administration of the sacraments; and whether a particular diocese of England anciently adopted the use of Sarum or the use of Hereford would depend upon the acceptance of its manual and missal and other office books, and have no necessary reference to its mode of intonation. The diocese of Ely, for example, might observe the use of the church of Sarum and nevertheless adopt the music, supposing (that is) that there were material differences between the two, of the church of York. Or it might retain some parts of both styles or modes of singing with other intonations proper to itself: all which would have no influence upon the use, properly so called, observed by the church of Ely. But if, upon the other hand, a part of the offices of Sarum, and a part of Hereford, and a part of York, were taken and rearranged, with an observance of this one and an omission of another; this would constitute a new use, viz. of the church of Ely. I do not speak of one or two and trifling differences; for these might allowably fall under the head of peculiarities.

In an improper and wide sense we may include under certain circumstances the mode of intonation adopted and ordered by any church in its use. Thus, we cannot separate the notation of a noted manual or missal of the church of Salisbury from the use of that church at the time when the particular volume, which we may be examining, was written or printed. But the book would still be the missal or the manual "secundum usum Sarum" if there was not one musical note contained in it. So, again, at different periods during the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries the music may have varied very materially, and yet the use of the church of Salisbury have continued one and the same.

The references which the rubrics, especially of the manual, frequently make to notation affect not as it appears to me the question in dispute. Some cite, as a proof that the music must necessarily be included within the meaning of the term "use," such directions as "omnes orationes dicuntur cum 'Oremus' sub tono prædicto;" or "dicat sacerdos sub tono consueto;" or "cum cantu sequenti;" or "dicat sacerdos orationes sequentes sub tono lectionis;" or, once more, "dicat in more præfationis." But the ecclesiastical tones to which these rubrics refer either immediately follow or precede them; or they might be, as especially in the case of the "tone of the lection" or "the tone of the preface," well-known and fixed, yet nevertheless not the same tone in all the dioceses which adhered strictly to the use of the church of Sarum or of York. These rubrics do not prove in every instance that the same music was necessarily to be followed, as were the integral portions of the public offices which made up the "use."

It may possibly be going too far to deny that the title "secundum usum Sarum," or "ad usum ecclesiæ Eboracensis," or "Herfordensis," prefixed to a breviary, or hymnal, or psalter, signifies sometimes in the printed books not the prayers only but the mode of singing authorised at the time in those dioceses; but then such books must be noted. If they do not contain the music (which is sometimes the case even with psalters and graduals) they would still be quite as properly and with the title also "secundum usum" of this or of that church; and in its strict sense, relating solely to the variety and arrangement of the prayers, hymns, and psalter, rites and ceremonies.

Some have said that "the hymnarium, the psalter, the gradual, and the pontifical are choral books, and noted," and therefore that we cannot exclude music from the notion of the term "use." But not to speak of the utter absurdity of calling a pontifical a choral book, the others did not necessarily contain the notation. The psalter, for example, according to the use of any church is entirely independent of the tones which may accompany it. Hence, when printing became general we find many examples of the psalter "secundum usum" of whatever church it might be with the lines ruled for the music, which however is not printed also but left to be filled in with manuscript. This of course would seldom happen in earlier ages, when the entire volumes were manuscript; and therefore affords an additional and not a light proof why we must not argue hastily from such expressions as "cum tono sequenti" and "dicatur hic cantus." Yet, in the same way, we occasionally find in manuscripts the services of festivals of late institution, such as of St. Osmund, or of the transfiguration, or of the visitation of the blessed Virgin, fully arranged and determined upon "secundum usum;" but the music not written in, although the proper lines and spaces may be left for it.

In the sense in which I have above explained it, we find the term use employed by the ritualists. It will be unnecessary for me to cite more than one example, from Gavantus; who, describing what is meant by the breviary according to the use of the church of Rome, says it is so called because it contains the prayers authorised by that church: and immediately before, in a fuller explanation, he particularises the lessons, the psalms, hymns, legends, &c., and the rubrics by which each day's office is to be ascertained; but not one word does he add which has reference to the music.⁵

Not improbably much of the doubt which has been thrown over the term "use" has arisen from the frequent occurrence of the verb canto: "cantare missam secundum usum," &c. But nothing is more certain than that canto does not always, especially in the earlier writers, mean to sing in the modern acceptation. To adopt the words of a very eminent writer: "cantare missam priscorum phrasi illi dicebantur, qui sine cantu et privatim celebrabant."⁶ So again Mabillon after citing a particular canon adds : "verbum canendo interpretor de privata recitatione, nec aliam interpretationem sequentia patiuntur."⁷ Thus an old "Expositio missæ" edited by Cochlæus⁸ says : "prima autem oratio super corpus Christi futurum secreta dicitur, et secrete canitur:" and the margin explains this to be "secreta oratio legitur." Once more, a passage in the "defensorium directorii" of the church of Sarum is very much to the point : "item illa duo verba quæ ponuntur in multis festis, sic: Invitatorium triplex, nihil oneris imponunt sacerdotibus qui dicunt officium suum sine nota: sed solum pertinent ad illos qui cantant officium cum nota."⁹ Here the use whether with or without music would continue equally and perfectly the use of Sarum; and no distinction as regards it either depends upon or is involved in the addition of a chant.

But there would be no end of accumulating examples of this sort. If the reader wishes to examine the question further I would recommend him, among other books, especially to read the dissertation of Mabillon de cursu Gallicano to which reference has already been made, and he will be satisfied that music does not form, except in an extended and improper sense, any part of what we ought to understand by the term "use" of a church.¹⁰

One word also, before I pass on, upon the expression in the passage in the preface to the common Prayer book, "the great diversity in saying and singing," and "now from henceforth all the whole realm shall have but one use." It is possible that the reformers, among their multiplicity of plans, did intend to enforce an uniformity in singing also throughout the realm: but, whatever they may have meant by the words just quoted, I think that it is quite clear that the first common Prayer book of king Edward was not aimed at the abolition of varieties of music but of a variety of prayers, and rites, and ceremonies. This last object was thoroughly effected. A diversity of singing nevertheless continued, not only in different dioceses but also in different churches of the same diocese: and at present there does not seem to be any rule, except the precentor's pleasure, even for the daily singing in a cathedral. Nevertheless, no one would suppose that the preface to the common Prayer is evaded or the act of uniformity is broken by this custom, whatever may be said of other practices. Merbecke (as is well known) about a year after the publication of the first Book tried something of the sort which the reformers merely hinted at; but his book was unauthorised, limited in its impression, and so far as we know never reached a second edition:¹¹ which necessarily must have been the case, if the demand for the book had been great in consequence of some authoritative order which enjoined it. Elizabeth in her injunctions, which were supplemental to her act of uniformity, and so far as they might have had any authority were grounded upon an especial clause in that act, attempted to supply the deficiency: yet these did not insist on a particular or one mode of

singing, but simply that there be "a modeste and destyncte songe used in all partes of the common prayers in the church."¹²

The portions of the missals which are reprinted and arranged in this edition form but a very small division of their respective volumes; but by far the most important. In examining them the student must bear in mind that although he may have expected to find greater and more numerous variations between them, such variations were not likely to occur, even in so large a proportion, in the ordinary and the canon. These, especially the last, were parts of the Divine Service which were studiously guarded against alterations, additions, or omissions: and even the changes of single words and differences of arrangement which he will find in them constitute, as decidedly as far more considerable differences in other parts of the books would, a variety of use. And I do not hesitate to say that the distinctions of the ancient liturgies of the church of England, compared between themselves or with the Roman use in the ordinary and the canon, are not only as great but greater and more in number, and involving points of higher consequence, than any signementes of levynges but that the same so remayne. And that there bee a modeste and destyncte songe so used in all partes of the common prayers in the church: that the same maye be as playnelye understood, as if it were read without singing."

previous acquaintance with such subjects, before an actual examination of the English missals, would have entitled us to expect.

To attempt even a sketch of the innumerable variations which existed in other parts of the English missals would be far too extensive a subject of enquiry. But take for example some masses near the beginning of the sanctorale according to the uses of the churches of Salisbury and York. The first service is that of the vigil of St. Andrew. In this the psalm, the verse after the gradual, one of the secrets, and one of the post-communions are different. Upon St. Andrew's day, the psalm again differs. Upon St. Thomas's day, the gradual, the offertory, and the post-communion are different. Upon the feast of the conversion of St. Paul, the introit, the psalm, the sequence, and the post-communion. Upon the feast of the purification, the sequence, tract, offertory, and secret.

Or again, compare one or two services from the commune of the missals of Hereford and Bangor. The services "In natali unius martyris et pontificis" agree only in the epistle and gospel. For "many martyrs" different lections, graduals, secrets, and communions are appointed. And, once more, in the service for a confessor and bishop, the tract, offertory, communion and post-communion are different.

The ordinary and the canon therefore occupying (as I have said) only a small part of the missal, the rest of that volume was filled with the various collects, epistles, gospels, sequences, graduals, &c. proper to the great festivals and fasts, the Sundays, and to occasions when the Church offered up especial prayers in behalf, for example, of the king or in the time of any dearth or pestilence. These were of course used, at least many of them, only once a year ; but the ordinary and the canon were daily said.

In these latter, moreover, were contained those rites which have been held from the earliest times to be essential not only to the valid but to a right or proper consecration of the holy eucharist. The several collections by Asseman, Renaudot and others, of liturgies which have been used in different patriarchates of the catholic church, contain those portions which are edited in the present volume : the other parts of many are altogether lost, and possibly some of the earlier liturgies had little else beside.¹³

lastly, after dismissing them likewise, for the penitents. Then, all these being dismissed, the missa fidelium, or service of the faithful, began with the εὐχή διασιωπῆς, the silent or mental prayer, which is the first of the three prayers mentioned in the Laodicean canon ; the second and third are said to be διὰ προσφωνήσεως. And these are the εὐχαί κοιναὶ καὶ ὑπὲρ ἑαυτῶν—καὶ ἄλλων πανταχοῦ πάντων in St. Justin. Then, after the priests washing their hands, and the kiss of peace and the μήτις κατὰ τινος, the deacons brought the δῶρα, the gifts of the people, to the bishop, to be by him placed on the altar ; and he having prayed secretly by himself, and likewise the priests, and making the sign of the cross with his hand upon his forehead, says the Apostolical constitutions, began the anaphora. Ancient liturgy of St. James, pref. 3.

As I shall have occasion presently to observe, so here also I may remind the reader, that the sacrament of the eucharist was never, since its institution, administered without the due observance of certain appointed ceremonies and prayers. These of course would be characterised during the first century of the existence of the church by a greater simplicity than in after years: and this, solely because many just reasons for the addition of other prayers and rites had not arisen, or they could not from the violence of persecution be allowed their due weight. But as time went on, and the roll of the saints and martyrs increased, commemorations of them were added, and collects, and hymns, and antiphons were increased in number, and the faithful sought to show their deep reverence for the service itself by a greater solemnity in its performance; all which was well fitting to the church of Christ when she was no longer driven to celebrate her mysteries in secret places, and hurriedly, and with the constant dread of cruel interruption.

CHAPTER II.

THE chief liturgies which have been preserved are those which are called St. James's, St. Mark's, St. Chrysostom's, St. Basil's, the Roman, and preeminent above all these, of an acknowledged greater antiquity than any, the Clementine.¹⁴ As this liturgy of St. Clement is reprinted at the end of the present volume it seems necessary that I should make one or two remarks by which it is to be hoped the reader will be able to form some opinion of its value.

Theological questions and doctrines of the highest importance are involved in enquiries into the origin and relative authority of the ancient liturgies. Some writers upon the subject have boldly argued that the apostles themselves left not merely decisions upon the doctrine of the sacrament of the blessed eucharist but an accurate form of rites and ceremonies and prayers; in short, a liturgy, according to which it should be administered: and that this still exists either in the liturgy of Antioch, or Alexandria, or Rome. Those who hold this opinion chiefly rely upon a passage in a treatise, generally attributed to Proclus bishop of Constantinople in the fifth century, in which the writer states that the apostles whilst they were together at Jerusalem, before their dispersion into various quarters of the world, were accustomed daily to meet and celebrate the holy communion; "et cum multam consolationem in mys-tico illo dominici corporis sacrificio positam reperissent, fusissime, longoque verborum ambitu missam decantabant.”¹⁵ St. Chrysostom also (cited by cardinal Bona) in his twenty-seventh homily enquires: “cum sacras cœnas accipiebant apostoli, quid tum faciebant? nonne in preces convertebantur et hymnos?”

On the other hand it has been argued that the founder of each patriarchal church required his converts to observe some certain rites which were essential to the validity of the sacrament, and left them at liberty to add to these other prayers and ceremonies as they might think proper. One thing is very certain; that the holy scriptures give us little information upon the subject: the institution of the holy eucharist is related by three of the evangelists, and by St. Paul in the first epistle to the Corinthians. We are told that our blessed Lord took bread, and blessed it, and said “This is my Body,” and in like manner that he took the cup, and blessed it, and said “This is my Blood:” but whether any more words were used in blessing is not recorded.

We cannot doubt that there was some form observed in the first communion which was celebrated by the apostles after the resurrection of their Lord; nor, that they who had been partakers and witnesses at the institution of the sacrament would be very careful, in their after celebrations, to imitate as far as possible the Saviour’s example. Indeed, this was a divine command: what He had done, they were to do; what He had said, they were to say; what He had offered, they were to offer; and power

also was given to them, and through them to the whole Church for ever, of altering or adding to or taking away from time to time, either prayers or ceremonies or rites, provided that they were not of the essence of the sacrament, and were intended to meet the requirements of various ages, climates, and countries, or to increase the solemnity of the celebration or to promote the devotion of the people. And it was this power which St. Paul claimed so unhesitatingly, as having been bestowed by our blessed Lord, when in the same epistle before spoken of to the Corinthians, and upon the very subject of the eucharist, he adds "and the rest will I set in order when I come."¹⁶

There is a famous passage of Gregory the great : in which it has been said that he asserts, and therefore he has been called in to prove, that the apostles used no other prayer or ceremony than the Lord's prayer only. The words of St. Gregory are : "Orationem dominicam idcirco mox post precem dicimus, quia mos apostolorum fuit, ut ad ipsam solummodo orationem, oblationis hostiam consecrarent. Et valde mihi inconueniens visum est, ut precem, quam scholasticus composuerat, super oblationem diceremus, et ipsam traditionem [forte orationem] quam redemptor noster composuit, super ejus corpus et sanguinem non diceremus."¹⁷ But all writers agree (that is, supposing the passage not to be corrupt) either that this assertion of St. Gregory is incorrect or that he himself intended more than the Lord's prayer to be understood. His argument, as it seems to me, is not that the Lord's prayer only was used by the apostles, but that they did not perform the whole service without reciting it. As cardinal Bona observes,¹⁸ with whom agrees Le Brun,¹⁹ at least the words of institution must have been added: "additis procul dubio verbis consecrationis."

That something must be understood to qualify the statement of St. Gregory is clear from the account of a very ancient writer, the author of the Gemma animæ: "missam in primis dominus Jesus, sacerdos secundum ordinem Melchisedech, instituit, quando ex pane et vino corpus et sanguinem suum fecit, et memoriam sui, suis celebrare hæc præcepit: hanc apostoli auxerunt, dum super panem et vinum verba quæ Dominus dixit, et dominicam orationem dixerunt. Deinde successores eorum epistolas et evangelia legi statuerunt, alii cantum, et alii alia adjecerunt qui decorem domus Domini dilexerunt."²⁰ And another, Walafrid Strabo, who lived some centuries earlier and not long after St. Gregory, speaking of the practice of primitive ages "primis temporibus" declares that although the eucharist was then celebrated with more simplicity than afterwards, yet "præmissa oratione dominica, et sicut ipse Dominus noster præcepit, commemoratione passionis ejus adhibita eos corpori dominico communicasse et sanguini, quos ratio permittebat."²¹

Or again, the whole place from St. Gregory is made agreeable to every other testimony of antiquity by rendering the word "ad" in the sense of "post;" of which examples might be found in the best writers. The pope would therefore merely intend to say that before the consecration of the sacred elements the apostles were accustomed to repeat only the Lord's prayer, and afterwards consecrate the eucharist. This interpretation leaves the whole question, except as to the ancient position of that prayer in the service, exactly where it was before.²²

It is not improbable that sometimes during the violence of persecutions when the faithful were forced to meet at night and in places the most obscure, the blessed eucharist was administered with the fewest possible rites, and even the accustomed and almost necessary prayers were abbreviated. These were extraordinary cases which afford no argument against the general tradition up to the apostolic age. Justin Martyr, presently to be quoted, is a sufficient evidence that the earliest form could not have been very short. To this we may add the text from the first epistle of St. Paul to Timothy, which all the best commentators agree relates to the celebration of the eucharist, as another witness: "I exhort therefore that, first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks be made,

We must not fail to remember the cause of the pope's epistle, and that St. Gregory was merely answering a complaint made by some Sicilians as to the position of the Lord's prayer in the canon: whether it ought to be said before or after the consecration of the elements.

for all men ; for kings, and for all that are in authority.”²³ Neither must we forget that the first Christian disciples, whether jews or gentiles, had been accustomed to the observance of many ceremonies and long prayers. There seems therefore little reason to believe, even if we had no evidence upon the other hand, that the apostles would so far oppose the prejudices of new converts in this respect, as to celebrate the highest and most solemn mysteries only by the bare use of the words, “This is My Body,” “This is My Blood;” with the addition simply of the Lord’s prayer.

I have delayed to examine at some little length the above assertion of St. Gregory on account of the importance which by many writers has been attached to it; especially by those who are always anxiously on the watch for every shadow of argument by which they can hope to controvert the steady voice of all antiquity, which declares that from the time of the apostles downwards some form, some liturgy, was always used in every part of the catholic Church. The variations in the ancient liturgies scarcely allow us to suppose that the same form was at first enjoined exactly in all the churches; but their constant agreement in substance and their uniform observance in nearly the same order of some particular rites make it certain that the apostles did at any rate require that order and declare that those rites are essential. We cannot trace the establishment of these rules to any canons of councils, nor can we name any age or place in which they were not observed; so that the rule of St. Augustine comes in, with a force not to be resisted: “Quod universa tenet ecclesia, nec a conciliis institutum sed

semper retentum est, non nisi auctoritate apostolica traditum rectissime creditur.”²⁴

Hence (manifest interpolations having been removed) there are few differences in the ancient liturgies which may not be attributed to the legitimate power vested in the bishop of each diocese, and more especially in each patriarch, to arrange the public service of the people over whom he was appointed.²⁵ That there should have been an exact

nominibus liturgiæ insignitæ sunt, nihil præceperit de vino aqua miscendo, de pronunciandis verbis Christi Domini, de invocando super dona proposita Spiritu sancto, de mittenda absentibus, aut ægrotantibus eucharistia, ut nec de multis aliis, quæ tamen ubique recepta fuisse et usu quotidiano ecclesiarum frequentata negari non potest. Nihil princeps apostolorum Petrus, aut Antiochiæ, aut Romæ scripsisse legitur, nihil Paulus, nihil alii: sed quod acceperant a Domino idem tradebant novis Christianis. Multo minus Basilius et Chrysostomus novas offerendi sacrificii eucharistici formas instituere poterant: ut neque a Gelasio primum aut a Gregorio magno Romana missa, neque ab Ambrosio Ambrosiana, Gothica a Leandro, Gallicana vetus a Gallicanis episcopis factæ sunt. Verum cum nota esset omnibus vetus et apostolica forma, quæ paucis verbis constabat, eam omnes secuti sunt, nec ab ea recesserunt: orationes quæ inter sacra dicebantur, cum multæ essent, selegunt, novas etiam addiderunt, agreement, both in words and ceremonies, cannot be expected; but the varieties were not of such consequence nor in so great a number as to affect the unity of the faith: "Multa pro locorum et hominum diversitate variantur" says Firmilian in his epistle to St. Cyprian "nec tamen propter hoc ab ecclesiæ catholicæ pace atque unitate discessum est." They who will not acknowledge any agreement, because in some matters of less consequence they find much variety, might as well expect a sameness throughout the world of civil rights, and customs, and observances. Not so argued one of our own archbishops, St. Anselm: "Queritur vestra reverentia de sacramentis ecclesiæ: quoniam non uno modo fiunt ubique, sed diversis modis in diversis locis tractantur. Utique si per universam ecclesiam uno modo et concorditer celebrarentur; bonum esset et laudabile. Quoniam tamen multæ sunt diversitates, quæ non in substantia sacramenti, neque in virtute ejus, aut fide discordant; neque omnes in unam consuetudinem colligi possunt: æstimo eas potius in pace concorditer tolerandas, quam discorditer cum scandalo damnandas. Habemus enim a sanctis patribus, quia si unitas servatur charitatis in fide catholica, nihil officit consuetudo diversa. Si autem quæritur unde istæ natæ sunt consuetudinum varietates: nihil aliud intelligo, quam humanorum sensuum diversitates."²⁶

had not taken place bringing with it the new common Prayer book and other changes, we should still have retained in England the old uses of, at least, Sarum and York. We cannot be surprised that under the pressure of the penal laws during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries the observance of the older rituals gradually gave way to the introduction of the Roman use. We may—and very reasonably—regret the fact; but a fact it is, and we have lost, probably for ever, many an ancient rite and ceremony, many a prayer and litany, which connected the rituals of queen Mary's reign with the mass said, or the offices which were celebrated, not only by St. Augustine before king Ethelbert and his people, but by priests and bishops of the earlier British church.

The love of uniformity and the desire to reduce everything to a single pattern—let that type or pattern be ever so excellent in itself—may be carried to excess. I would adopt the language which Mabilion has used, speaking of a diversity of ritual: “Ferenda est rituum illa diversitas, vel maxime propter bonum pacis, immo etiam propter Ecclesiam, quæ hac varietate decoratur. Nescio enim quo modo dulcius sapit, quod vario cultu ornatur. Et hoc quidem primum cavendum est in illis, qui cærimoniarum magistratum gerunt: quorum nonnulli nunquam quiescunt, nisi omnes ad suos ritus vel invitos pertraxerint. Alterum incommodum est eorum, qui vel antiquos novis, vel e contrario novos antiquis ritus semper præferendos volunt. Neutrum sine delectu placet. Ubi regnant antiqui ritus, hi constanter retinendi; ubi novi præ antiquis prævaluerint, antiquos laudare decet, novos non rejicere. Vix enim unquam accidit, ut quod usu semel receptum est ac firmatum, absque perturbatione possit mutari. Et quidem ut rituum varietatem induxit locorum varietas, ita etiam eorundem iisdem in locis mutationem aliquando persuasit temporum diversitas. Itaque laudanda in ejusmodi rebus constantia, modo cætera adsint, Ecclesiæ pax atque concordia, et Christiana caritas, cui omnes ritus cedere ac suffragari necesse est. Quod si salva pace et caritate retineri potest antiquitas, quin novitati præferenda sit, nemo sane sapiens negaverit.”²⁷

This power just spoken of, which from the nature of the office of the episcopate was vested in the bishops of the church, to accommodate the rites of public worship to the requirements of their people was in general very moderately exercised; nevertheless it was fully allowed and in reality unlimited, so long as the essentials of the eucharistic service were preserved and nothing introduced which was obnoxious to the One Holy Catholic Faith. During the first three centuries there were more reasons than in after-years why individual bishops should not hesitate, upon their sole authority, to make if they thought it desirable even considerable alterations in the liturgies. For they could not upon every occasion of doubt or difficulty which arose in the persecutions to which they were exposed ask advice of other of their brethren, much less meet together in a general council. But when they did so meet, it is clear from some canons of two of the earliest councils whose records have come down to us that liturgical and ritual matters were not overlooked. Thus the second, third, and fourth, the eighth, ninth, and forty-first of the apostolical canons, and several also of the Eliberitan council, have reference to such points.

were liturgies first committed to writing? Some have contended that the apostles were themselves the authors of those several liturgies which claim their names; but so great is the majority against them that we may say it is agreed upon that the apostles were not the authors. There is no account of any such composition in the works of the first fathers; and surely, if no others had, Origen or Jerome would have made some mention of it. Councils, at least the very early ones, are silent; and these would have appealed to a written apostolic liturgy, if they could, against the errors and teaching of heretics. Both Tertullian, when speaking of the eucharistic rites,²⁸ and St. Cyprian,²⁹ upon the question of mixing water with the wine, appeal to tradition only; which we can scarcely conceive would have been the case had they known of any liturgy written by an apostle. If, once more, such a liturgy ever existed it would almost certainly have been among the number of canonical books, and so included in the sixtieth canon of the council of Laodicea. Any addition to or alteration in it must have been instantly disallowed; but we know that alterations were very anciently made, and prayers if not essential left out or inserted in some of the liturgies claiming to be apostolic.

The date at which they were first written is open to far more dispute; perhaps, no liturgy was committed to writing for the first two centuries. Renaudot is clearly of this opinion; he says it is beyond all controversy and cites St. Basil, de Spiritu sancto, cap. 27. The passage is of great importance in more respects than in its bearing upon this question, and I shall therefore extract it according to the text of the Paris edition, 1839: "Οἷον (ἵνα τοῦ πρώτου καὶ κοινοῦ πρῶτον μνήσθω) τῷ τύπῳ τοῦ σταυροῦ τοὺς εἰς τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ ἡλπικότας κατασημαίνεσθαι, τίς ὁ διὰ γράμματος διδάξας; Τὸ πρὸς ἀνατολὰς τετράβθαι κατὰ τὴν προσευχὴν, ποῖον ἐδίδαξεν ἡμᾶς γράμμα; Τὰ τῆς ἐπικλήσεως ῥήματα ἐπὶ τῇ ἀναδείξει τοῦ ἄρτου τῆς εὐχαριστίας καὶ τοῦ ποτηρίου τῆς εὐλογίας, τίς τῶν ἀγίων ἐγγραφῶς ἡμῖν καταλέλοιπεν; Οὐ γὰρ δὴ τούτοις ἀρκούμεθα, ὧν ὁ ἀπόστολος ἡ τὸ εὐαγγέλιον ἐπεμνήσθη, ἀλλὰ καὶ προλέγομεν καὶ ἐπιλέγομεν ἕτερα, ὡς μεγάλην ἔχοντα πρὸς τὸ μυστήριον τὴν ἰσχύν, ἐκ τῆς ἀγράφου διδασκαλίας παραλαβόντες. Εὐλογοῦμεν δὲ τό τε ὕδωρ τοῦ βαπτίσματος, καὶ τὸ ἔλαιον τῆς χρίσεως, καὶ προσέτι αὐτὸν τὸν βαπτίζομενον. His argument in that part of his treatise is directed solely to the question of the canonical and sacred scriptures; and it is not unusual for that father to speak of customs and rites as unwritten which are not found distinctly insisted on and explained.

A better argument by which we may conclude that until the end of the second century liturgies were not committed to writing is (as Renaudot observes) that although we find frequent mention made of the scriptures being given up to the heathens through fear of punishment or death, we have no instance of any book of ceremonies or public worship; neither would the persecutors have enquired so cruelly by torture what mode of offering and sacrifice the Christians observed, if they could have procured a written liturgy.

Upon the other hand, as I have already said, it has been argued that liturgies were in all ages written; and the chief difficulty of unwritten forms seems to be that the length of them would have rendered it impossible that, generally, priests should have been able to celebrate without a book. But it is not necessary for us to suppose that more than the solemn portions were preserved and handed down unwritten; certainly the psalms and lections from the scriptures, the epistles and the gospels, and very probably long prayers and thanksgivings also were not forbidden to be written. We may therefore conclude that in its strict sense no liturgy was written for some ages, because certain indispensable and essential rites which constitute a liturgy were handed down by tradition only. We have a very remarkable proof how late this disinclination to commit those parts to writing was cherished in the western church, from a letter from Innocent I. early in the fifth century to a bishop, Decentius, who had applied to him for the Roman use: “sæpe dilectionem tuam ad urbem venisse, ac nobiscum in ecclesia convenisse non dubium est, et quem morem vel in consecrandis mysteriis, vel in cæteris agendis arcanis teneat, cognovisse; quod sufficere arbitrarer ad informationem ecclesiæ tuæ, vel reformationem, si prædecessores tui minus, aut aliter tenuerint.”³⁰ memory. Among her doctrines none were so scrupulously concealed, little less from the catechumen than from the unbeliever, as were those connected with the blessed eucharist. She did not seek to hide them from her admitted children, but from men who were her avowed enemies or unproved candidates for her privileges. She knew and remembered her Lord's command, "Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rend you."

It was because of a holy reverence that the Church required her priests thus to celebrate from

Hence therefore it was that except in the first epistle to the Corinthians St. Paul in all his writings has not made any plain mention of this sacrament; and then there was abundant reason, from the necessity of the case, not only why he should speak but also openly and freely. For the very abuse which he was endeavouring to correct, namely, the permitting unworthy persons and perhaps not even members of the Church to be present at the holy communion, had admitted these already to the knowledge of much connected with the solemnities of the celebration of it. As a learned but very prejudiced writer has observed, "it was not in the apostle's power to conceal the outward part of the mystery from them, who by the countenance of their new teachers had been emboldened to break in upon the eucharist, without being duly qualified; and therefore the only way that he had left to him, to prevent their further contempt and abuse of it, was to let them into the fuller knowledge of it."³¹ Such an exception, as we can see so evidently the cause, confirms the rule which it is not to be denied that St. Paul appears at other times to have invariably observed.

³¹ Johnson, Unbloody sacrifice, vol. i. p. 57. The same writer has some very forcible remarks upon the omission by St. Paul in the epistle to the Hebrews of any notice of the prefiguration of the Christian sacrifice in the oblation of Melchisedeck. There was apparently, but for some powerful motive, every reason

We have further proof how carefully our Saviour's caution was obeyed from the very obscure manner in which the ante-Nicene fathers, when they speak of it at all, speak of the eucharist; so obscure indeed, especially near the apostolic age, that none could understand their import except those who had been fully admitted into the communion of the Church. No article relating to it was inserted into any creed; and the very probable reason has been given, which must occur to every reader, that creeds were forms of faith to be taught the catechumens in order to their baptism. Not so the eucharist; which was considered too sacred to be spoken of in words at length, except to the perfect only.³² Take why he should then enter into it; and this motive, as St. Jerome tells us, was because he thought it not proper to discourse of that sacrament familiarly to people not yet settled in the faith. "Difficultatem rei proœmio" (says that father, in his epistle to Evagrius) "exaggerat dicens, super quo multus est nobis sermo interpretabilis, non quia apostolus id non potuit interpretari, sed quia illius temporis non fuerit. Hebræis enim, id est Judæis, persuadebat, non jam fidelibus quibus sacramentum passim proderet."

³² Upon this Johnson has the following (Unbloody sacrifice, vol. i. p. 235): "The reasons they had for the concealment of these mysteries [of the sacraments] were in sum, to show the great esteem they had of them, and which they by this means endeavoured to imprint upon all that were admitted to the knowledge and enjoyment of them; and at the same time to guard, and if possible secure them from the flouts and objections of Jews and heathens, and of all whom they thought too light and frothy to be entrusted with things so very weighty and serious, and yet of so peculiar a nature, that there was nothing in the world that could in all respects be compared to them. For they justly believed that a Divine power went along with the sacraments, which was reason enough why also, for example, the famous passage in St. Justin ; in a part of his Apology where he is giving an account of the ceremonies of the Christians in their common worship ; how cautiously he speaks, how anxiously he seems to weigh every word, lest he should say even upon such an occasion too much. “ Upon the day called sunday ” (he tells us) “ we have an assembly of all who live in the towns or in the country, who meet in an appointed place ; and the records of the apostles or the writings of the apostles are read, according as the time will allow. And when the reader leaves off, the president ³³ (ὁ προεστὼς) in a discourse admonishes and exhorts us to imitate such good examples. Then we all they should set the highest value upon them, and desire that others should do so too ; and yet they knew the visible signs of these sacraments to be beggarly elements, things in their own nature very cheap and common ; and they might without the gift of prophecy easily foresee that the enemies of Christianity would always be ringing in the ears of all that were well affected to Christianity (as the deists and quakers are perpetually labouring to persuade our people) that there can be no such effects of water, bread, and wine, as priests of the Christian church would have them believe. And there is one thing peculiar to the eucharist, which made it more liable to scoffs than any other part of our religion ; which is that the bread and wine were believed to be the very Body and Blood of Christ ; no wonder if they were much upon the reserve in this point ; since all must be sensible that nothing in the Christian theology could have afforded more agreeable entertainment to the drolls and buffoons of the age ; for whatsoever is most extraordinary, and elevated above the condition of other things, which seem to be of the same sort, lies most exposed to profane wit and mirth, when that which gives it its worth and excellency can only be believed and not seen : and no doubt Tertullian spoke the sense of all the learned fathers of his own and of the succeeding times in those observable words, ‘ nil adeo quod obduret mentes hominum, quam simplicitas Divinorum operum, quæ in actu videtur ; et magnificentia, quæ in effectū repromittitur. ’ ” stand up together and pray; and, as we before said, when that prayer is finished bread is offered, and wine and water. And the president then also, with all the earnestness in his power (ὅση δύναμις αὐτοῦ³⁴), sends up prayers and thanksgivings. And the people conclude the prayer with him, saying, Amen. Then distribution is made of the consecrated elements; which are also sent to such as are absent by the deacons."

Such is St. Justin's description of the celebration of the eucharist upon the Lord's day or sunday, as the fathers usually call it in their apologies because it happened upon the day which was dedicated to the sun, and therefore best known to the heathens by that name. In the section immediately preceding, he relates in almost the same language the manner in which the newly-baptized was admitted to and received his first communion, in which one circumstance is added, namely, the kiss; and thus, short and obscure as this account must at the time have appeared, we can clearly trace many important parts of the holy service; the general and the eucharistical prayer; the kiss of peace; the oblation of the elements; the mixture of water with the wine; the consecration of the elements, then no longer common bread and common wine³⁵ but the

Body and the Blood of Christ; and their after distribution to those present, or communion. Let us not, by the way, pass on without remembering that there would have been no need of so much carefulness to conceal these mysteries from the world, from those who were without, if the eucharist had been indeed nothing more than what later ages have endeavoured to reduce it to, a mere refreshing of our memories, or a renewal of our covenant, or a symbol of mutual love. But from this jealousy arose the evil of unjust accusations against the Christians "latebrosa et lucifuga natio,"³⁶ which, although terrible, they were content to bear, unprovoked to further explanation, with the bare reply of an indignant and unhesitating denial.

We may delay for one moment upon the important assertion of St. Justin and of St. Irenæus (in the note) that after consecration the elements are no longer to be looked upon as common bread and wine. So speaks St. Ambrose to an objector: "forte dicas: aliud video, quomodo tu mihi asseris quod Christi corpus accipiam? et hoc nobis adhuc superest ut probemus. Quantis igitur utimur exemplis? Probemus non hoc esse quod natura formavit, sed quod benedictio consecravit: majoremque

³⁶ Cardinal Bona says of the heathens, "*quia aliquid subobscurè perceperant de sacramento corporis et sanguinis Christi, accusabant eos de cæde infantis et epulis Thyesteis. vim esse benedictionis quam naturæ: quia benedictione etiam natura ipsa mutatur . . . ipse clamat Dominus Jesus: Hoc est corpus meum. Ante benedictionem verborum cœlestium alia species nominatur, post consecrationem corpus significatur. Ipse dicit sanguinem suum. Ante consecrationem aliud dicitur, post consecrationem sanguis nuncupatur," &c.³⁷ Again, in a remarkable place of his homilies St. Cyril of Alexandria plainly lays down the same doctrine: "δεῦτε, φάγετε τὸν ἐμὸν ἄρτον, καὶ πίνετε οἶνον, ὃν ἐκέρασα ὑμῖν ἐγὼ ἐμαντὸν εἰς βρῶσιν ἡτοιμάσα, ἐγὼ ἐμαντὸν τοῖς ποθοῦσί με ἐκέρασα."³⁸ And once more, St. Irenæus to the same effect: "Quando ergo et mixtus calix, et factus panis percepit verbum Dei, et fit eucharistia sanguinis et corporis Christi, ex quibus augetur et consistit carnis nostræ substantia; quomodo carnem negant capacem esse donationis Dei—quæ de calice, qui est sanguis ejus, nutritur; et de pane, quod est corpus ejus, augetur?"³⁹

To the above, which are but very few out of many places which might be appealed to in the primitive fathers, I shall add an extract from a rare book, once highly popular in this country and, in a sense, authorised by the church of England to be distributed among the people for their instruction, namely, "The ordinarye of a Christen man." The author is speaking of almsdeeds: "The xij. maner of almesdede spyrytuell is to offre or to make offrynge

Besides, from allusions which we find frequently in the fathers, how certain is it that they could not have believed the blessed elements to be any longer common bread and wine. St. Chrysostom, for example: “Μὴ ὅτι ἄρτος ἐστὶν ἰδῆς, μηδ’ ὅτι οἶνός ἐστι νομίσης· οὐ γὰρ ὡς αἱ λοιπαὶ βρώσεις εἰς ἀφεδρῶνα χωρεῖ. Ἐπαγε, μὴ τοῦτο νοεῖ. Ἀλλὰ ὥσπερ κηρὸς πυρὶ προσομιλήσας οὐδὲν ἀπυσιάζει, οὐδὲν περισσεύει· οὕτω καὶ ὧδε νόμιζε (συναναλίσκεσθαι) τὰ μυστήρια τῇ τοῦ σώματος οὐσίᾳ.”⁴¹ Or St. Cyril of Jerusalem, in an explanation of the Lord’s prayer: “Τὸν ἄρτον ἡμῶν τὸν ἐπιούσιον δὸς ἡμῖν σήμερον. ὁ ἄρτος οὗτος ὁ κοινὸς οὐκ ἐστὶν ἐπιούσιος. ἄρτος δὲ οὗτος ὁ ἅγιος, ἐπιούσιός ἐστιν. . . οὗτος ὁ ἄρτος οὐκ εἰς κοιλίαν χωρεῖ καὶ εἰς ἀφεδρῶνα ἐκβάλλεται· ἀλλ’ εἰς πᾶσαν σοῦ τὴν σύστασιν ἀναδίδεται, εἰς ὠφέλειαν σώματος καὶ ψυχῆς.”⁴² Or, once more, St. Ambrose, speaking of the manna in the wilderness, as compared with the eucharist: “Sed tamen panem illum qui manducaverunt, omnes in deserto mortui

To return : the eucharistic rites of the Christian church in the first centuries being in part, that is all the most solemn and mysterious portions of them, handed down by tradition only, the earliest written liturgy which we have is the Clementine. This forms a part of the eighth book of the apostolical constitutions, a work which most certainly was not compiled by those whose name it bears, namely, of the apostles ;⁴⁴ and therefore labours under all the disadvantages which must attach to writings not genuine. Still the authority of the constitutions is very great and will at least reach thus far ; that though we might hesitate to insist upon any statement, certainly of belief perhaps also of practice, to be found there only, yet where such statements are confirmed by incidental allusions or by direct accounts of the same things in other writers earlier or contemporary we may then fully rely upon them. We must remember also that it was not uncommon

⁴⁴ A conclusion agreed upon by almost all writers upon the subject. The constitutions were probably gathered together from very much older materials about the middle of the fourth century. The tradition may have been primitive which traced the rites, not the language, of the liturgy to St. Clement.

for authors and compilers of that age, the third and fourth centuries, to recommend their works by ascribing them to great saints, and teachers who were departed. This may have been a practice at all times to be much regretted, and most undoubtedly it is little according to modern opinions; yet it not only is not in itself a condemnation of every fact or doctrine so recommended, but it sprang from a sense of unworthiness and modesty which has long been lost, and was based upon a well-grounded presumption that there existed in the people a reverence for their fathers, which has well-nigh been lost also.

In the apostolical constitutions then is the liturgy attributed to him whose name is in the Book of Life, St. Clement.⁴⁵ With respect to his name in particular being attached to it we may well adopt the words of Zaccaria, in his defence of the liturgy given to St. James: "Illud tamen doctissimis criticis lubens concessero, quæ apostolorum nomine circumferuntur liturgiæ, eas multo recentiores esse suisque auctoribus suppositas. At nulla id fraude factum contendo; Jacobum enim, cæterosque apostolos liturgiam quampiam, seu ordinem precum in sacramentorum administratione, atque eucharistiæ præsertim immolatione servandum constituisse prudens nemo inficiabitur. Quare cum processu temporis aliqua in illis immutari, demi nonnulla, addi alia contigerit, apostoli, a quo primum liturgia edita fuerit, nomen retentum est tum in tantum auctorem reverentia, tum eorum, quæ ab illo profecta fuerant, atque etiam tum usurpabantur, ratione."⁴⁶

against the acknowledged epistle of St. Clement.

⁴⁶ Bibl. ritualis, tom. 1. disert. 2. p. lxxxvj.

Without entering into any unnecessary discussion, it will be sufficient simply to state that the most probable opinion about the Clementine liturgy is this: that although we grant that it was never used exactly in the form in which we now have it in any portion of the Church (neither indeed does it claim for itself any place or country in particular), still it is to be looked upon as accurately representing the general mode prevalent through the Christian world during the first three centuries of administering the eucharist. A reasonable argument in its favour is that where the other liturgies, claiming to be primitive, are agreeable to each other they agree with the Clementine; and that the Clementine contains nothing, either particularly in its arrangement or generally in its manner of expression, which is not to be found in all the others. The most important omission is that the Lord's prayer forms no part of it: but this may, as has been suggested,⁴⁷ have arisen from the negligence of some transcriber in whose copy the first words only might have been written (and those in contraction); or it might be readily allowed never to have been used in this liturgy, because although proper to the holy service yet most certainly it is not essential to the consecration of the eucharist. In the other ancient liturgies in which the Lord's prayer occurs it is placed after the consecration is completed; and this is what I have already attempted to show was what St. Gregory meant in the passage which was before examined, with whom, so explained, agree a number of the earliest writers.⁴⁸ Every other liturgy bears evident marks of the rites and ceremonies which have been added from time to time to the original form; that form seems to stand clearest in the Clementine.⁴⁹ How decided is the opinion of a learned writer⁵⁰ "that if we had the very words in which St. Peter and St. Paul consecrated the eucharist, it would not differ in substance from that which is contained in this most ancient liturgy:" and of another also:⁵¹ "the eucharistical office in the apostolical constitutions is the standard and test by

'Post hæc inquit, nempe post commemorationem fidelium defunctorum, dicimus orationem illam quam Salvator suis discipulis tradidit.'" Bona, tom. 3. p. 320. These, and other authorities, Optatus, Augustine, Cæsar Arelatensis, St. Ambrose, &c., are cited by most of the ritualists.

Mr. Palmer argues from the omission of the prayer the great antiquity of the Clementine liturgy, speaking of it as a remarkable sign. He says: "Without doubt the Lord's prayer was used between the prayer of the deacon and benediction of the faithful, which precedes the form τὰ ἄγια, &c. all through the patriarchate of Antioch in the early part of the fourth century. Yet it does not occur in this part of the Clementine liturgy. Now it is not credible that the author would have omitted this prayer if it had been used long before his time. Yet from the manner and language of Chrysostom and Cyril we perceive that it must have been used long before their time. They both seem to regard this prayer as coeval with the rest of the liturgy: they do not allude to the idea that it had not been formerly used in that part of the liturgy. Since then the Lord's prayer was not used, or was but recently used, in the time of the author of the apostolical constitutions, and yet appears to have been long used in the time of Cyril and Chrysostom, we must infer that the apostolical constitutions were written much before the time of Chrysostom and Cyril." Origines lit. i. p. 40.

which all others are to be tried. And by comparing them with this the innovations and additions in after times, be they good or bad, will appear."

Being then so valuable a record⁵² I cannot think that a reprint of it will be out of place in the present volume. We may refer to it as Hickes has recommended; we may look upon it with Johnson as in substance the apostolic form, and so learn to judge more truly than we otherwise might of other liturgies. As such a guide we may regard it, not to the exclusion of the Jerusalem, or Alexandrian, or Roman⁵³ (as if these had not also sprung from the teaching and example of apostles), but as containing in an earlier form than is supplied by any extant manuscript those rites which are essential to a valid consecration and perfecting of the eucharist, and without which no service, though it may claim the name, can be allowed to be a Christian liturgy.

Subject to the exception of the omission of the Lord's prayer in the Clementine liturgy—as we now have the text of it in the apostolical constitutions—we may agree with Mabillon's statement, that there were some certain rites and ceremonies to be found in all the liturgies, whether of the east or the west.

⁵² It is scarcely necessary for me to remind the reader that we have also an equally valuable commentary upon it, in the fifth catechetical lecture of St. Cyril.

⁵³ "That there were ancient liturgies in the Church is evident: St. Chrysostom, St. Basil, and others: and though we find not in all ages whole liturgies, yet it is certain that there were such in the oldest times, by those parts which are extant: as 'Sur-sum corda,' 'Vere dignum et justum,' &c. Though those which are extant may be interpolated, yet such things as are found in them all consistent to catholic and primitive doctrine, may well be presumed to have been from the first, especially since we find no original of these liturgies from ancient councils." Answer of the Bishops to the exceptions of the Ministers; Cardwell, Hist. of Conferences, p. 350.

These were, he tells us, lections from the holy scriptures at the beginning of the service, oblation of the bread and of wine mixed with water, consecration by the saying of the very words used by our Lord Himself, the Lord's prayer, and communion with thanksgiving.⁵⁴

We may add to these some two or three other details; such as the reading of the diptychs, whether of the living or the dead, the recital in some shape of a creed or declaration of the one Faith, the kiss of peace, and a preface or "sursum corda."⁵⁵

After the council of Nice, and in the age immediately preceding, additions were unquestionably made to the original forms which had been used in various churches. Some of these are easily to be traced: and the observation of St. Paul to the exist among the liturgies, and (as he truly remarks) "the marvellous substantial identity of the eastern and western" families or groups. In the first sentence of his introduction we are told that he includes under the term "ancient liturgies" "all which can trace their descent directly from some known early form." The present communion service in the book of Common prayer of the church of England is not, however, included in Mr. Hammond's tables of comparison. No explanation (I believe) is given of the omission; and we are left to conclude that in its arrangement and contents the English communion service is to be regarded as a composition of the sixteenth century and cannot be traced to any known early form.

Corinthians in his first epistle, where he says "there must be also heresies among you, that they which are approved may be made manifest among you," is as applicable to the public services and rituals of the catholic church as to the opinions of her individual members.⁵⁶ During the short space when there was indeed but one mind and one faith there was little need of cautious phrases, and additional safeguards by which the truth might be preserved: very different was the case after the time of Arius, and Macedonius, and Nestorius; and epithets even became necessary which in purer days would perhaps but have seemed to mar the earnest simplicity of the prayers of the Church.

⁵⁶ As Vincentius of Lirins says upon this text of St. Paul: "ac si diceret; ob hoc hæreseôn non statim divinitus eradicantur auctores, ut probati manifesti fiant, id est, ut unusquisque quam tenax et fidelis, et fixus catholicæ fidei sit amator, appareat. Et Adversus hæreses, § 20.

CHAPTER III.

WE must now pass to the consideration of the particular liturgy from which the ancient uses of the church of England are known and acknowledged to have been immediately derived. The Roman was the earliest and the chief of the patriarchates of the catholic church. The contentions of neighbouring provinces, the irruptions of barbarians, the local influence of her bishops, and above all her anxious and untiring energy in the propagation of the true faith, rapidly strengthened the primacy of the see of Rome. We might naturally therefore expect that in the remains of antiquity which have been spared to us we should find a complete liturgy which she had used from her first foundation, with perhaps also a history detailing exactly the various alterations which it has undergone.

But we know little about it. Writers who lived long ago, and to whom we may have supposed some accounts would have come down, speak in very general terms. Durand⁵⁷ contents himself with saying "in primordio nascentis ecclesiæ missa aliter dicebatur quam modo . . . sequenti vero tempore epistola tantum et evangelio recitatis missa celebrabatur: subsequenter Cœlestinus papa instituit introitum ad missam cantari. . . Cætera diversis temporibus ab aliis papis leguntur adjecta, prout Christianæ religionis cultu crescente visa sunt decentius convenire." Going back some four hundred years, Walafrid Strabo tells us what is still less satisfactory: "quod nunc agimus multiplici orationum, lectionum, cantilenarum, et consecrationum officio, totum hoc apostoli, et post ipsos proximi (ut creditur) orationibus et commemoratione passionis Dominicæ, sicut ipse præcepit, agebant simpliciter."⁵⁸

Hence it is that some who dislike the authority of liturgies have denied to the Roman all claim to any great age; and have ascribed its first beginning as a form to Gregory the great, or to Gelasius, or Vigilius, or Leo, in succession bishops of Rome. Others, on the contrary, have boldly given the Roman liturgy to St. Peter as the sole author, at least of the canon, and assert that it has come down to us in the main points unimpaired.

Those writers from whom I have just made extracts state their full conviction of the truth of this: for example, Walafrid Strabo in the same chapter: "Romani quidem usum observationum a beato Petro accipientes, suis quique temporibus quæ congrua judicata sunt addiderunt." And more expressly an archbishop of our own Anglo-saxon church; Ælfric in his pastoral epistle: "Now was the mass established by our Lord Christ; and the holy apostle Peter appointed the canon thereto, which we call Te igitur."⁵⁹ The later ritualists, men of the greatest learning and of unwearied labour in these enquiries, take the same ground. Gavantus declares that St. Clement received the Roman liturgy from St. Peter.⁶⁰ Le Brun also: "Romanæ ecclesiæ

⁵⁸ De rebus eccles. cap. 22. Walafrid arrives at this result after premising "quantum invenire potuimus, exponamus." And he then gives much such an account of additions as Durand and other writers.

⁶⁰ Thesaurus sacr. rituum, tom. 1. p. 2. Merati in his notes tells us of the altar preliturgia dubio procul ex S. Petro per traditionem derivatur.”⁶¹ Georgius again: “Sacrarum cærimoniarum origo, ab apostolicis temporibus ducta, viam nobis stravit ad Romanæ liturgiæ vetustatem, cujus primordia et ordinem beato Petro ecclesia Romana debet.”⁶² But the chief authorities upon which these opinions rest are of St. Isidore, who lived in the seventh century; and of Innocent I. in the fifth. The first tells us: “ordo missæ vel orationum, quibus oblata Deo sacrificia consecrantur, primum a sancto Petro est institutus,” and he adds, what certainly was incorrect, “cujus celebrationem uno eodemque modo universus peragit orbis.”⁶³ Innocent lays down the same, in a passage too long to extract, in an epistle to the bishop Decentius: from which Georgius draws this conclusion: “Heus quanta ex hoc plane aureo S. Innocentii pontificis testimonio hauriuntur! Vides enim Romanam ecclesiam a sancto Petro, ut diximus, ordinem missæ edoctam.”⁶⁴ Much more sound is the interpretation which cardinal Bona,⁶⁵ with whom agrees Pinus,⁶⁶ puts upon the last sentence of St. Isidore; and which I would extend to the other early authorities to the same purpose: “hoc de re et substantia, non de verborum tenore et cæremoniis intelligendum est.”

For as the truth is unquestionably not with the advocates of the first of the two opinions which I have mentioned, so with some limitations, although it may not be freed from all objection, we may agree with the others. To name as the author of the Roman liturgy any particular apostle is beyond possibility: but the essential rites which are in all ancient liturgies are to be found also in the canon of the Roman catholic church in every age, up to the most early, through which we are able to trace it. We may assert therefore that the Roman liturgy springs equally with the others from an apostolic form; and that it has preserved all essentials with a most jealous care, whilst successive popes and bishops in various countries have exerted their legitimate power and added such prayers and ceremonies as they thought fit. As Muratori says, "canoni certe, in quo tremendi mysterii summa consistit, nihil unquam additum fuit, quod vel minimum substantiam rei mutet."⁶⁷

⁶⁷ De rebus liturg. p. 119. Some writers, of considerable authority, are disposed to argue that in the first years of Christianity at Rome the liturgy was not said in Latin but in Greek. De Rossi, in his Roma sotteranea cristiana, is of this opinion. So also dean Milman; but this last writes in too prejudiced a style to be much relied upon, when the facts or doubts which he is stating give rise to or touch upon disputed questions of theology. Speaking with hesitation, I would say that in the total absence of anything which can be regarded as evidence upon the question it seems to be highly improbable that the Roman liturgy in the first century—to say nothing about the second century—was in Greek. Undoubtedly the Greek language was known widely among the higher ranks of Roman people in the time of Nero; but the first converts were chiefly made from the lower classes. Apostles were at Rome: they had inspired authority to decide what the rites and ceremonies of the liturgy should be, and the especial words to be used in the prayers. There would have been no more difficulty, looking at it simply as a mere worldly matter, in drawing up the liturgy in one language than in another. It is scarcely to be believed that St. Peter or St. Paul, having collected a congregation of new Christians, would have allowed them to offer up the most solemn

• In attempting to give a most brief account of the Roman liturgy I said in the preface to the first edition of this work (1844) that we could not do better than adopt the words 'of a careful enquirer, the author of the Origines liturgicæ. I should have to appeal to the same sources as himself, and I have found no reason, after further examination, to suppose that any other plan would be more advantageous now. He tells us, "that many of the mistakes into which men have fallen on this matter have arisen from confounding two very different things, the missal and the liturgy. The missal is a large volume containing a number of missæ, or offices for particular days, which were to be added in the canon."⁶⁸ By the liturgy we are to understand the "ordinary and "canon which did not vary, and the number and order of the prayers which were service of their faith in a language which they did not understand. It is quite probable also that the bishops and priests whom they ordained throughout the west were in many instances ignorant of Greek. The objections—such as they may be—which can be brought against the continued and exclusive use in every part of the world of one single eucharistic service in a dead language would have had more force when referred to the first beginnings of the Christian church, and to the wants or requirements of her members then. I make these remarks in the fewest possible words; being precluded from more fully discussing the subject to the extent which it justly demands, because it would of necessity involve questions of controversy, which I am especially anxious to avoid.

⁶⁸ I have no hesitation in adopting Mr. Palmer's account, but we must take the term liturgy in its most strict sense, and an unusual one, to exclude the other portions of the missal from it; in the present instance it is allowable if we include, as I doubt not was intended, the ordinary with the canon. It is much to be wished that Mr. Palmer had remembered his own definition; and not upon the other hand extended somewhat improperly the idea of a liturgy, in giving such a title as Origines liturgicæ to his whole work.

to be added from the missal. . . It is acknowledged that Gregory collected, arranged, improved, and abbreviated⁶⁹ the contents of the individual missæ, and inserted a short passage into the canon, viz. Diesque nostros in tua pace disponas, atque ab æterna damnatione eripi, et in electorum tuorum jubeas grege numerari. He joined also the Lord's prayer to the canon, from which it had previously been separated by the breaking of bread. All this amounts to positive proof that Gregory was the reviser and improver, not the author, of the Roman liturgy."⁷⁰ "Seventy years before Gregory, Vigilius in an epistle to Profuturus bishop of Braga in Spain says that he had received the text of the canon from apostolical tradition: he then gives him a description of it, which coincides accurately with the Roman liturgy in subsequent times." "Before him, Gelasius, A.D. 492, ordained prayers or collects, and prefaces, and arranged them in a sacramentary, agrorum et bestiarum, servitium dominis præstitum, ut alia impedimenta omittam. Hosce, ut opinari fas est, absterrebat a sacris prolixitas liturgiæ. Idcirco satius visum fuit, eandem contrahere, et præsertim postquam præceptum invaluit de missa audienda singulis dominicis, aliisque festis solennibus." De rebus liturg. p. 14.

which in after ages commonly bore his name.” Again, “a manuscript sacramentary is in existence supposed to have been written before the time of Gelasius, evidently referring to the same order and canon as that used in his time; and is known by the name of the Leonian sacramentary. Leo the great is said to have added in 451 certain words, which also are specified; sanctum sacrificium, immaculatam hostiam: so that the remainder of the canon was in existence before his time.” “Some time again before Leo, Innocentius speaks of the Roman rites as having descended from St. Peter the apostle,⁷¹ and there is no sort of reason to think that they differed materially from those used by Gelasius at the end of the same century.” And we are brought to this conclusion: “that this liturgy was substantially the same in the time of Gelasius as it was in that of Gregory, that it appears to have been the same in the time of Innocentius at the beginning of the fifth century, and was then esteemed to be of apostolical antiquity.”⁷²

sage from Labbe, Concil. 2. 1245.

And the very succinct account which another ritualist gives us: “Romanæ liturgiæ triplex veluti ordo seu status considerandus est. Unus primigenius, ab ecclesiæ nascentis exordio ad Gelasium usque receptus: alter Gelasianus, auctorem seu amplificatorem habens Gelasium papam ejus nominis primum:

The reader, if he wishes to enquire further into this subject, will find a good account of the various additions and alterations from time to time in the Roman liturgy in a not uncommon book, the The-saurus sacrorum rituum of Gavantus.⁷³ But he will do well to correct this by the older ritualists, Walafrid Strabo and others; and especially by two ancient histories of the changes made in the Roman service, which have been printed by Georgius in the appendix to his third volume de liturgia Romani pontificis.⁷⁴ These were found in the celebrated manuscript of the queen of Sweden, now preserved in the library of the Vatican. Before we pass on I cannot but add, as to a single point, the authority of one of our own most celebrated men, the venerable Bede, who was almost a contemporary of him of whom he is speaking, pope Gregory the great: "sed et in ipsa missarum celebratione tria verba maximæ perfectionis plena superadjecit, 'Diesque nostros in tua pace disponas, atque ab æterna damtertius Gregorianus, ita dictus ex nomine Gregorii M. qui Gelasianum ordinem correxisse memoratur. Qualis fuerit primigenius ille, non omnino constat. Gelasianus diu desideratus est: sed tandem illum e tenebris eruit vir de ecclesia bene meritus Josephus Thomasius. Gregorianus demum in usu communi est modo apud omnes fere ecclesias, notis et observationibus a Menardo nostro illustratus. Gregoriani a Gelasiano totum discrimen est in varietate et numero earum orationum, quas collectas vocant: nam cætera utriusque eædem omnino partes sunt. In Gelasiano duæ aut tres ante epistolam orationes; unica secreta ante præfationem; atque duæ post communionem, quarum una est supra populum. At in Gregoriano tres tantum ad singulas missas assignantur orationes, quarum una ante epistolam, altera secreta, tertia post communionem." Mabillon, de lit. Gallicana, lib. i. cap. 2. iv. Compare also Gavantus, The-saurus, tom. i. p. 5.

When, however, we speak of additions, these as regarded the ordinary and canon were small both in number and extent : and there can be but little doubt that the Roman liturgy, in its strictest sense, was in the first and second centuries considerably longer than it now is ; which is indeed certain if more than one pope, as it has been remarked, not only arranged but abbreviated it. Therefore it would at that time be more like the other ancient liturgies, and correspond with the account given us by Justin Martyr. Muratori⁷⁶ observes that as in the Greek churches prayers were said before the preface for the whole church, for kings, for catechumens, &c., and other prayers again after the consecration for the clergy ; so an old Latin writer upon the sacraments, speaking of the eucharist, says “ in it praises are offered to God, and prayers for the people, for kings, and others.”

We shall probably never know what was the primitive liturgy of the churches of Britain—observed perhaps in parts of the island for many centuries—before the arrival of St. Augustine. It is almost certain that every copy of it which could be identified has been long ago destroyed. Ancient fragments or even complete copies may possibly have been preserved in some monastic libraries until the time of Henry the eighth. The difficulty seems to be acknowledged by very eminent authorities. Azevedo says, “ Anglicani autem officii nullum est monumentum, quo cognosci possit ante S. Gregorii ævum, qui evangelii præcones ad Christianam religionem restituendam illuc misit.”⁷⁷ And Mabillon, to cite no more: "Qualis fuerit apud Britones et Hibernos sacrificandi ritus, non plane compertum est. Modum tamen illum a Romano diversum extitisse intelligitur ex Bernardo in libro de vita Malachiae, ubi Malachias barbaras consuetudines Romanis mutasse, et canonicum divinæ laudis officium in illas ecclesias invexisse memoratur."⁷⁸ Certainly Azevedo is speaking of the offices of the canonical hours rather than of the liturgy; and so Mabillon also, although he begins with speaking of the "ritus sacrificandi:" but there is so great a connexion between the two that any information or suggestion as regards the one throws some light upon the other.

We are equally ignorant as to the persons by whom or at what exact date Christianity was first preached in Britain. The legends about the coming of St. Paul or St. Peter or St. Joseph of Arimathea, and other similar stories, may be set aside as without real foundation. But whilst we do so put them aside, it by no means follows that the true faith was not known in Britain, and that there were no converts, before the second century. Intercourse with the continent was frequent and easy: there were large numbers of Roman soldiers and merchants in the country and many settlers, whose numbers must have rapidly increased as year after year passed by. Christianity must have been heard of, and it is almost impossible but that some, perhaps many, Christians might have had occasion to visit or to reside in the country. On the other hand, there is no evidence of any value that the true faith was introduced by missionaries from Rome.

When we come to the middle of the second century

there seems to be firmer ground to rest on: and we may more readily rely on the suggestion that the formal organisation of a church in Britain, with bishops rightly consecrated, is to be traced to the church at Lyons which had been founded by missionaries from Asia. That there were Christians in Britain before the middle of the third century is undeniable; and in the year 314 British bishops are named among those who attended the council of Arles. Still, we have no records to guide us in even guessing at what were the precise forms of liturgy and ritual at that time used. If they had been brought by converts from Lyons they would have a character like that of the Ephesine church; and the changes in them which might have been made from time to time in Gaul would naturally have been introduced also into Britain. The peculiarities and variations of the Gallican liturgy would have been found in the British.

Stillington is not an author whose judgment is to be depended on, so hastily does he seem in his Origines Britannicæ to have settled questions of rituals and liturgies, and so much inclined to misrepresent facts. Yet on this particular difficulty we may adopt his language. Speaking of some ancient manuscripts still extant of the Gallican service, he tells us: "from these excellent monuments of antiquity compared together, we may in great measure understand the true order and method of the communion service of that time, both in the Gallican and British churches." Presently he assures us that we may obtain from those records of the Gallican liturgy "a just and true account of the public service then used in Britain."⁷⁹

⁷⁹ Origines Britannicæ, p. 240.

Upon the whole subject I would further refer the student to an important work, recently published, with very learned notes and introduction, by Mr. Warren, of St. John's College, Oxford.⁸⁰ I know no book upon the same subject of equal value. The introduction will be found to be especially useful; and following it are gathered together, carefully edited, the fragments which are still extant of any liturgy or ritual which can justly claim a Celtic origin. By the term Celtic church Mr. Warren means "the church which existed in Great Britain and Ireland before the mission of St. Augustine, and to a varying extent after that event, until by absorption or submission the various parts of it were at different dates incorporated with the church of the Anglo-saxons."⁸¹

The ancient Gallic churches used the same order of prayers in the celebration of the eucharist, although, as appears from three editions published by Thomasius and from a fourth by Mabillon, the prayers themselves somewhat differed. A brief description of their arrangement is given by Martene in his excellent work De antiquis ecclesiæ ritibus.⁸² He says:—

⁸¹ Although perhaps unnecessary, it is right that I should guard myself against being understood as consenting to every deduction which Mr. Warren seems to arrive at. He writes on some points as an Anglican naturally would upon certain claims and assertions made by Roman catholic theologians. These passages however occur but seldom; and the author's opinions are expressed in language to which no exception can reasonably be taken. Even with these demerits—if I may venture so to call them—no student of the ancient history and rituals of the old British church will hesitate to acknowledge the obligation which he is under to Mr. Warren for the care and labour which have been taken in the preparation of his book.

The Gallic liturgy began with an antiphon, which was sung by the choir. This was followed by a preface or sermon to the people, in which the priest exhorted them to come with due reverence to the holy mysteries. Silence being then proclaimed the priest saluted the people, and after their response said a collect which the people heard upon their knees. After the collect the choir sang the trisagium, which was followed by the canticle, "Benedictus Dominus Deus Israel." (These, however, were omitted during lent.) Then came lessons from the prophets and the apostolic writings, after which the hymn of the three children was sung. This was followed by the reading of the gospel; before and after which the trisagium was again sung, and the people gave the response (still continued by a kind of tradition in the English protestant church), "Glory be to Thee, O Lord." Afterwards the bishop either himself preached or, if he was infirm or ill, ordered a homily to be read by a priest or deacon. Then the appointed prayers were said by a deacon for the hearers and catechumens. These latter having been dismissed and silence enjoined the bread and wine were brought in, and an oblation of them made whilst the choir sang an anthem called sonum, or more properly, sonus: which according to Martene (who is followed by Gerbert⁸³ and Le Brun⁸⁴) upon the authority of St. Germanus answered to the offertory of later times. Then the sacred diptychs were read, the collect post nomina was said, the kiss of peace given, and the collect ad pacem said by the priest, after which the canon followed, which was very short. After the consecration came the prayer post secreta ; “postea fiebat confractio et commixtio corporis Christi.” In the mean time the choir sang an anthem. This was followed by a collect, the Lord’s prayer, and another collect. (It appears that the Lord’s prayer was said by both the priest and the people.) Before communion the blessing was given, if by the priest in this form : “Pax, fides, et caritas, et communicatio corporis et sanguinis Domini sit semper vobiscum.” During communion the trecanum (it is doubtful what this was⁸⁵) was sung by the choir. Then one or perhaps two collects were said, and the people were dismissed.⁸⁶

⁸⁶ Compare the account also of this liturgy given by Mr. Palmer, Orig. lit. vol. i. p. 158. The argument by which he would prove that it was originally from the east and not from Rome is of considerable weight. See also Le Brun, Opera, tom. ii. p. 126.

A very curious point, of no little importance and well worth examination, is the similarity between the most ancient English and Irish manuscripts now extant, and those of the east. The author of a valuable modern publication says, “the collation of many of these manuscripts has also furnished additional (although unlooked for) evidence that the ancient church in these islands corresponded with the eastern churches.” Westwood, Palæographia sacra, pref. 1. Again, he alludes to an extraordinary similarity between the ornaments in the ancient Syriac manuscript of Rabula, and those in the most ancient Anglo-saxon manuscripts, particularly as regards a very peculiar and common

Such was the use which the existing English churches probably observed in celebrating the holy eucharist until the end of the sixth century. St. Augustine brought with him the liturgy then authorised and followed at Rome; he first landed about the year 597 during the lifetime of pope Gregory himself. After his return to England, as archbishop, he requested the pope to decide some questions; and among them, especially, what service was to be used in the English churches as the Gallican and Roman liturgies were not the same.⁸⁷ The answer was, that he might himself choose either; or select the liturgy which he thought most suitable from the various forms in the catholic church, provided only that he had regard to the circumstances pattern formed of several slender spiral lines united in the centre of a circle: and continues, "these apparently trifling circumstances seem to me to prove more forcibly than the most laborious arguments, the connexion between the early Christians in these islands and those of the east, so strongly insisted upon by various writers." Note upon the psalter of king Athelstan. These remarks have not the less weight because they occur only incidentally, in a work directed towards a totally different object.

clesia, atque altera in Galliarum tenetur?

"Respondit Gregorius papa. Novit fraternitas tua Romanæ ecclesiæ consuetudinem, in qua se meminit nutritam. Sed mihi placet, sive in Romana, sive in Galliarum, seu in qualibet ecclesia, aliquid invenisti quod plus omnipotenti Deo possit placere, sollicite eligas, et in Anglorum ecclesia, quæ adhuc ad fidem nova est, institutione præcipua, quæ de multis ecclesiis colligere potuisti, infundas. Non enim pro locis res, sed pro bonis rebus loca amanda sunt. Ex singulis ergo quibusque ecclesiis quæ pia, quæ religiosa, quæ recta sunt, elige; et hæc, quasi in fasciculum collecta, apud Anglorum mentes in consuetudinem depone." Hist. Eccles. lib. i. cap. xxvii. 60.

and prejudices of the country, and the glory of God.

The question of the archbishop appears to me to be a very strong proof of the identity of the old British and the Gallican liturgies. If on his first coming he had not found any remnant of the earlier church, or if the liturgy which it still observed was not the same or nearly the same as the Gallican, I do not see why any doubt or hesitation should have risen in his mind as to the immediate introduction of the Roman use.⁸⁸ Had there been no prejudices to remove in the case of the British churches which still existed in many, even though perhaps remote, parts of the island; prejudices which the holy missionary knew and felt were to be considered, and if possible to be indulged; if, I say, there had been none such, there does not seem any reason whatever to suppose that he would not have required everywhere the adoption of the Roman liturgy, to which he had been always accustomed. We learn also from the answer of St. Gregory, that although it differed from the Roman yet in his judgment the Gallican or (if we may so conclude it) the British liturgy contained nothing that was objectionable.

Naturally the influence of St. Augustine and his successors led to a very wide adoption, in its main features, of the Roman liturgy: and it has been said that the few manuscripts which have come down to us of the Anglo-saxon age are but transcripts of the sacramentary of St. Gregory.⁸⁹ This may be true of the manuscripts which are extant; but true only in a general way of the facts as they existed: in the same way, for instance, in which, about the middle of the eighth century, Egbert archbishop of York must be understood in one of the answers of his Dialogue.⁹⁰ I say must, as even Dr. Lingard, a great upholder of the early and complete introduction of the Roman use into England, cannot but allow, when he owns that "even at the close of the eighth century the Scottish liturgy was in daily, though not exclusive, use in the church of York."⁹¹ That is, in Egbert's own cathedral. What Dr. Lingard means by "though not exclusive" I do not comprehend.

About the same time, A.D. 747, a council at Cloveshoo added the sanction of its authority to the observance, as far as the various dioceses would receive them, of the Roman ritual and missal. We must be careful not to press beyond such a limitation these canons, as otherwise we should be plainly contradicted by other records which have come down to us: and it is not clear that we must even go to that extent; for the object seems rather to be directed to an uniformity of time, and the Roman or Gregorian chant. I extract the first of these, which relates to the liturgy: "xiii. Ut uno

hebdomada post pentecosten Anglorum ecclesiæ celebrandum destinavit. Quod non solum nostra testantur antiphonaria, sed et ipsa quæ cum missalibus suis conspeximus apud apostolorum Petri et Pauli limina." Wilkins, Concilia, tom. i. p. 85.

eodemque tempore ubique festivitates dominicæ, seu martyrum natiuitates peragantur. Tertio decimo definitur decreto: ut uno eodemque modo dominicæ dispensationis in carne sacrosanctæ festivitates, in omnibus ad eas rite competentibus rebus, id est, in baptismi officio, in missarum celebratione, in cantilenæ modo, celebrentur, juxta exemplar videlicet quod scriptum de Romana habemus ecclesia. Itemque ut per gyrum totius anni natalitia sanctorum uno eodemque die, juxta martyrologium ejusdem Romanæ ecclesiæ, cum sua sibi convenienti psalmodia seu cantilena venerentur."⁹²

Le Brun mentions a remarkable manuscript which he says proves that for a considerable period the Anglo-saxon church, or at least some part of it, adopted not the Gregorian but the Gelasian sacramentary.⁹³ Whether this may have been so or not, there can be little doubt but that the canon of the church of Rome, subject to certain variations, was admitted and generally observed by the Anglo-saxon churches long before other portions of the missal, or other rites and ceremonies. Mabillon allows this to have been the case with respect to the Gallic liturgy in France.⁹⁴

Without delaying longer upon this enquiry we may probably conclude, that as Christianity spread among the Anglo-saxons the canon of the church of Rome, as distinguished from the old Gallican, was gradually received by them, and also in the British churches which may still have existed. But it would be the general arrangement only, and not always the exact words. Not merely would ancient pre-Judices and ritual peculiarities have influence against the newer form, but the bishops of the several dioceses into which England was gradually divided (it may well be thought) exercised the power of which I have already spoken to enjoin, within the limits of their respective jurisdictions, rites and ceremonies and prayers. Possibly this power was not invariably exercised with due discretion; some trifling and objectionable practices may occasionally have been suffered to interfere with the solemnities of the public service and offices. Yet, after all, these were to no great extent; and there is ample proof how careful the rulers of the church were to prevent such scandals. In fact, when we remember the rudeness of the manners of the Anglo-saxons, how little learned many of the most pious and earnest of the bishops, how numberless the old heathen superstitions which still existed, we must own the constant presence and direction of the Almighty Head, Who alone could preserve a due and fitting order against the pressure of so many difficulties.

One abuse the Anglo-saxon church was most anxious to fight against; although it has been with superficial writers not uncommon to assert the contrary: namely, the introduction of any pagan rites. It will be sufficient to quote two examples. The nineteenth canon of the council of Chalcuith, A.D. 785, at a time when it would have seemed to human policy most desirable by any way to conciliate the heathens, enjoins in the plainest terms: "Ut unusquisque fidelis christianus a catholicis viris exemplum accipiat; et si quid ex ritu paganorum remansit, avellatur, contemnatur, abjiciatur. Deus enim formavit hominem pulchrum in decore et specie: pagani vero diabolico instinctu cicatrices

teterrimas superinduxerunt.”⁹⁵ And again, in the eleventh century, the fifth of the ecclesiastical laws of king Canute: “prohibemus etiam serio omnem ethnicismum.”⁹⁶

CHAPTER IV.

THE eucharistic offices of the Anglo-saxon church may therefore have been, for many years, distinguished from each other by very important variations : and it is probable that throughout England, up to the century preceding the conquest, they differed in some degree or other, to the extent even of the number of the different dioceses. Doubtless they all preserved the essentials of the service, according to the very brief account which Ælfric gives us in his easter-homily: “ Ða apostoli dýdon swa swa Crist hét. þat hi halgodon hláf and wín to húsle eft sýððan on his gemýnde. Eác swýlce heora æfter-gengan and ealle sacerðas be Cristes hæse halgiað hláf and wín to húsle on his naman mid þære apostolican bletsunge.”⁹⁷ These differences of each diocese from another continued⁹⁸ until the civil subordination of the whole land under one head

⁹⁸ There were also varieties observed by the different monastic orders; several of which have been printed in later years.

Those according to the uses of the Benedictines, the Cistercians, the Carthusians, the Dominicans, and Franciscans were published before the year 1500. These were upon the one hand forbidden to the secular clergy, see Benedict XIV, Opera, tom. ix. p. 408; and on the other were binding upon the members of the respective orders; Azevedo, de div. off. exercit. x. p. 55. But compare the order presently about Barking monastery.

About the year 1085, Osmund, bishop of Salisbury, drew up and promulgated a form which should be used in his diocese:⁹⁹ and whether from the known ability and earnestness of Osmund himself, whether from the fame of his new cathedral and the college of learned clergy which he had collected,¹ ⁹⁹ "At the conquest monasteries had a deep share in the afflictions of the conquered nation; some of the best of their manors were sacrilegiously taken away, their treasures plundered, and their liberties infringed. Most of the English abbots being deposed for little or no causes, strangers were preferred to the richest abbeys in the kingdom, who introduced several new customs to the grievance of the old Saxon monks.

"The first thing which seemed very hard was the altering their missals; upon this account what great heats were there in the abbey of Glastonbury! when Thurstan, the pragmatical Norman abbot, would have forced the monks to lay aside the old Gregorian service, which had been used there time out of mind, to make use of the new devotions" (i. e. manner of singing) "of William of Fiscamp. These and several other innovations, which were bringing in upon them, were stopped by the pains of Osmund, bishop of Salisbury, who composed a new ritual, afterwards known by the name of the missale in usum Sarum, and generally used in England, Scotland, and Ireland." Tanner, Notitia monastica, pref.

4. I do not think it necessary to stop to correct the above statement, which the reader may easily do for himself.

Although we must scarcely take the words of Bromton literally, yet his statement shows that the reception of St. Osmund's arrangement was rapidly and widely spread soon after the bishop's death. Bromton wrote about the year 1300, and speaking of St. Osmund says: "Hic componit librum ordinalem ecclesiastici officii quem consuetudinarium vocant, quo fere tota nunc Anglia, Wallia, et Hibernia, utitur." Chron. p. 977. The chronicler here uses the term consuetudinary in its wide and less exact meaning, as including what is properly called the ordinal.

or from whatever cause, this Use of Sarum was very generally adopted in the south of England as well as in other parts of the country, and even, it has been said, upon the continent.² It did not however altogether exclude the other uses of York, Bangor, Hereford, and Lincoln which were still enforced in their respective districts: these were small perhaps in comparison with the wide reception of the use of Sarum, and neither their exact limits nor their authors can be ascertained: it seems certain that the uses of Lincoln and Bangor were observed in fewer dioceses than those of York and Hereford.

We must not suppose that this extended influence was obtained all at once, or even in less than a long lapse of time, by the liturgy and ritual of the church of Salisbury: nor, again, must we forget that those who testify to its greatest renown lived some three or four hundred years after its original settlement under the direction of bishop Osmund.³ During that period many severe struggles, of which all the disparagement of the other English uses, has probably been because the service books of that church are with few exceptions the only ones which are extant. No perfect book, or even any large fragment, is known to exist of Lincoln; only two manuscripts, namely, the missal in my possession, and the pontifical belonging to the dean and chapter of that cathedral, claim to be of Bangor; and but ten or twelve copies altogether are known of the books of Hereford and York [1848]. During the last thirty years some few other copies of the two last uses have been found.

³ One reason why writers in modern times have perhaps too much exalted the Salisbury, to

memorial has been lost, may have occurred; and many difficulties and jealousies which opposed its progress may have been gradually but slowly overcome. In less however than two hundred years after Osmund's death we have a proof how high the character of the Sarum use already was, in the constitutions of one of his successors; who in the year 1256 declares that "like the sun in the heavens, the church of Salisbury is conspicuous above all other churches of the world, diffusing its light everywhere, and supplying their defects."⁴

There are two important cases upon which a few remarks may not perhaps be out of place. And first of the cathedral of St. Paul in London, the chief city of the kingdom. Collier tells us that in the year 1414, and therefore we may conclude not till then, an order was made by bishop Clifford "with the assent of the chapter, that from the first of December following divine service should be performed in his cathedral, secundum usum Sarum: and that the old form and rubric called St. Paul's should be laid aside."⁵ With this is quite agreeable the manner of expression in two inventories of the church, printed in Dugdale's history of St. Paul's: in the one made A.D. 1298 books are simply spoken of "de usu S. Pauli;" but in the other, in 1486, we have "vetus missale," "aliud vetus missale secundum usum S. Pauli," and "unum ordinale secundum primariam ordinationem et antiquam ecclesiæ S. Pauli."⁶ But we have the best evidence that in the cathedral of St. Paul the use of Sarum was not admitted without also the retaining some of its own old peculiar ceremonies: I mean that of the author of the Defensorium directorii who says, speaking on a certain point, "probatur ista assertio esse vera per venerabiles viros ac patres canonicos ecclesiæ sancti Pauli Londonensis, qui totum officium divinum in cantando et legendo observant secundum usum Sarum ecclesiæ. Sed de cærimoniis vel observationibus ejusdem nihil curantes: sed custodiunt antiquas observantias in ecclesia sancti Pauli a primordio illic usitatas."⁷

A manuscript is preserved in the library of the British museum which is called in the catalogue "missale in usum D. Pauli:"⁸ from which we might have hoped to obtain much information upon this point: and we doubtless should, had it been a copy of the old use of that church. But it is later than 1414 and the rubrics throughout speak of and are according to the use of Sarum: nor do there seem to be any variations of the slightest importance, with one exception. Indeed, the only authority why it has been so called "of St. Paul's" appears to have been a tradition, and possibly a correct one, that it

⁷ Monumenta ritualia, vol. ii. p. 360. The practice of the cathedral of St. Paul was, as we may suppose, of considerable authority; and the Defensorium appeals in another place to it, upon a disputed point (p. 342); where the decision of the "venerabiles cardinales ecclesiæ sancti Pauli" is given. As Ducange tells us, there were in many cathedrals and monasteries some chief appointed among the priests, "quibus ex concessione summorum pontificum licitum erat, ut soli ad præcipuum altare quod cardinale vocabant, unde cardinales dicti solemnem missam celebrarent." Verb. Presbyter. But I think in the present instance reference is made to the cardinals of the choir, who were officers of St. Paul's cathedral, chosen from the minor canons by the dean and chapter to have the direction of the choir. See some ancient statutes, printed in Dugdale, Hist. of St. Paul's, appendix, p. 241.

formerly belonged to that cathedral. We may accept the tradition, because although like most copies of the missal in that age it has numerous directions which refer to parish churches and not to cathedrals, it has also some rubrics which could relate only to a large establishment of priests and ministers. Nor can there be any doubt but that it was the property of some great church in London : this is clear from the rubric upon the feast of St. Mark, directing the procession upon that day to go to some church in the city or in the suburbs, and return after the celebration of mass to their own church. The exception above spoken of is remarkable : the canon of this manuscript contains the prayer "Agimus tibi Deo Patri gratias ;"⁹ and is the only example I remember to have met with, except in the Hereford missal, and in the magnificent manuscript of abbot Litlington at Westminster. The prayers which precede it are however not according to the Hereford but to the Salisbury use.

We have a proof that the old use of St. Paul's was held in high estimation in an order relating to Barking monastery, in Essex, about 1390 : "Nota quod diversis temporibus intra conventum nonnullæ emanarunt altercationes . . . igitur nos cupientes dictas altercationes et discordias radicitus extirpari præsentī extirpamus edicto secundum antiquas consuetudines istius domus approbatas, quod conventus prædictus tres modos diversos habeat sui servitii dicendi ; primo horas suas dicat secundum regulam sancti Benedicti ; psalterium suum secundum cursum curiæ Romanæ ; missam vero secundum usum ecclesiæ sancti Pauli Londoniarum."¹⁰ distinction between the use "Romanæ ecclesiæ" and "Romanæ curiæ," see Azevedo, de div. off.

The other case to which I alluded is of Exeter. In the year 1339 bishop Grandisson drew up a body of statutes for his new and most munificent foundation of the collegiate church of St. Mary at Ottery. These enter into minute particulars of the services to be performed by the members of the college; and whilst two or three chapters prove that the Sarum was then the received use of the diocese they no less show a sort of jealousy still existing, and an earnest desire upon the part of the bishop to establish an Exeter use. Thus in the seventh he speaks of the divine office on certain occasions being performed "secundum ordinale et consuetudinarium quæ eis fecimus et extraximus ex Exoniæ et Sarum usibus."¹¹ Again in the tenth that all the members should attend chapter "saltem in sabbato, ut Exoniæ fit." In the thirty-sixth we have the two uses identified: "Item volumus quod in majoribus festis . . . sicut Sarum et sicut Exon." And, once more, in the seventy-seventh the bishop speaks out very plainly: "Item statuimus quod ubicumque ordinale vel consuetudinarium vel statuta nostra non sufficient forte in multis faciendis per totum annum, quod tunc recurratur ad ordinale et consuetudinarium Sarum. Ita tamen quod semper omnia per nos disposita firmiter observentur. Nolumus tamen quod allegent vel dicant unquam se usum tenere Sarum, sed magis Exoniæ, vel, ut verius dicant, usum per nos eis traditum proprium et specialem."¹² The extent to which the bishop's wishes were carried in this matter must remain doubtful: we find however, about one hundred years after, in 1436, an order made by the founder of "Godeshous" (a charitable institution for the poor in the same city of Exeter) that the chaplain should say his office "secundum usum Sarum."¹³

We have proof of the acceptance of the use of Sarum in the county of Suffolk from the fact that one of the ordinals of that church in the library of the British museum was one of the service-books of the parish church of Rysbey.¹⁴ It is true that occasionally the Sarum service-books refer to the uses of other English dioceses; as, for instance, to the use of the church of Lichfield on St. Chad's day (March 2nd). We must not however conclude that in other respects the use of Lichfield varied from the Sarum; but that this particular exception was allowed as a peculiarity retained by that church, upon the festival of its patron. This is quite clear from the constitutions of Lichfield in 1428, where observance of the rules of the ordinal of Sarum is expressly enjoined.¹⁵ harmonious) the holy eucharist was celebrated in England until the year 1547, the first of king Edward the sixth. Their origin cannot be attributed merely to man's ingenuity and learning, or even piety; but they are to be traced, as has been very briefly shown, through the sacramentaries of Gregory and Gelasius and Leo to the well-spring of all Christian truth, the age of the apostles.

In March, 1548, a form was published to be used in the distribution of the consecrated bread and wine, if any lay persons desired to communicate. By this there was to be no alteration made in the old services, although a very significant hint was given of the intention of the king's advisers;¹⁷ but after the priest had himself communicated, he was to exhort the people to a worthy partaking with him, in almost the words which are still used in the reformed Prayer book; beginning, "Dearly beloved in the Lord, ye, coming to this holy communion, must consider what St. Paul writeth to the Corinthians," &c. This was to be followed by a charge to all open sinners to withdraw, and the invitation "You that do truly and earnestly repent you of your sins," &c.: after which a confession and absolution, and a prayer; and then both the host and the chalice were given, with these words, "The body of our Lord Jesus Christ, which was given for thee, preserve thy body unto everlasting life;" and, "The blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, which was shed for thee, preserve thy soul to everlasting life." Having received, the people were dismissed with a blessing.

Although this form has been more than once reprinted—for example, by Dr. Cardwell in his Two Prayer books of Edward the Sixth, and by Wilkins in the fourth volume of the Concilia—I have thought it well to include it in the appendix to the present edition, on account of its great historical importance. The original editions are of extreme rarity; scarcely more than five or six copies are known to exist. There are three in the British museum, all in quarto, of the same date, March 8, 1548, and all different; that is, not in the matter or in the variation probably of a single important word but in the setting up of the type.¹⁸ It would require of course more

¹⁸ All of those which have any date are said in the colophon to be "imprinted" "in the second year of the reign of our soueraigne lorde, kyng Edward the vi." This is perfectly correct; Edward began to reign in January, 1547. The first common Prayer book which is dated in 1549, and was probably not printed until either the last day of March or after the month of March in that year, is nevertheless a legal document of the second year of king Edward. There have lately been very considerable discussion and somewhat heated arguments as to the right meaning of the words in the rubric of the present common Prayer book that certain things "shall be retained and be in use, as were in the church of England, by the authority of parliament, in the second year of the reign of king Edward the sixth." In these discussions more than one writer has asserted that the rubric does not refer to the first Prayer book of 1549, inasmuch as it was undeniably neither published nor printed until after January 1549; and, therefore, must have had the authority only of the third year of king Edward. But in those days all acts of parliament dated from and took effect from the first day of the session; and the particular parliament referred to in the rubric began in November 1548, that is, in the second year of his reign. It was not possible in the year 1662 rightly to refer to any statute passed during that session except as "by authority of parliament in the second year."

Even if there were any doubt about this we might further in-than one press to supply the large number which would be wanted. There is a single copy in the Bodleian ; and this, again, is a different edition. It is a small duodecimo ; and apparently intended for the use of people in the congregation and not for the priest.¹⁹

sist that the Prayer book of 1549 is the first document relating to the public services of the church of England which was ever submitted to the consideration and approval of parliament, or received its "authority." Nothing of the kind can be alleged about any articles of visitation and enquiry, or any injunctions and the like, put forth either by Henry the eighth or Edward. These, including the Order of communion of 1548, rested solely on the "authority" of the crown.

What I have just said falls (in a certain way) within the scope of the subject of this volume, which extends to the final abolition of the old liturgies, however altered or added to, of the church of England. I would ask permission to say one word (whether exceeding my limits or not) on the alleged "authority" of the Advertisements of 1566. Setting aside the extreme difficulty—and after so much labour spent without success, we may say the impossibility—of proving that these Advertisements at any time had the force of law, no legal judgment in the present century seems to be so directly contrary to all the principles which for generations have been supposed to rule the decisions of our chief courts as that which lately told us that a clause in an act of Parliament plainly referring to the second year of king Edward is to be understood as referring to the seventh year of queen Elizabeth. We can only hope that if reasons of policy or expediency had weight with any of our judges in arriving at this decision, it may be very long before we need be ashamed of another example. Nothing can shake men's reverence in England for legitimate authority more than bringing in "expedience" to overrule the distinct language of an act of Parliament.

¹⁹ There is no date ; and no printer's name. It collates in eights to B. iv, with the last leaf blank. If my memory serves me, no copy of the 1548 Order of communion could be found in the Bodleian forty years ago, when I was preparing the first edition of this book ; nor (I believe) is there any entry or other record whence this very curious and unique copy came. It has been recently bound ; and I think it possible that the late librarian, in his unwearied searchings among the treasures in his charge, may have discovered it mixed up with a number of other tracts.

Alterations in faith and ritual were marvellously rapid in the time of Edward the sixth ; and it might be difficult to decide whether any trace or remnant of the old faith would have been left in the reformed church of England if he had lived to the common age of man. In comparison with the changes made in the five years of his reign the ten centuries which had elapsed since the coming of St. Augustine may be said to have changed almost nothing. For a thousand years the liturgy of the church of England had suffered no omission, had endured no addition, which in the slightest degree affected the doctrine which it taught. The brief space of what might easily be counted as months instead of years swept away the old liturgy, to be replaced by a new Communion service with new prayers and exhortations, new rites and ceremonies.

The observance of "the order of Communion" of 1548 lasted only for a very short time. I must acknowledge that after a careful examination of the rules or rubrics which it contains I am utterly at a loss to understand how it was to be obeyed ; nor do I know where to look for any contemporary explanation of the difficulties.

There may not be much in the omission of a direction at what previous service the priest was to give his parishioners the preliminary warning "at least one day before he shall minister the communion." Still it is an omission ; and we have nothing whatever as a guide. Again, was no one to communicate except on those days of which previous notice had been given ? in other words, was the priest forbidden to give communion to a parishioner at any other mass during the week or (it might be) month before ? Once more : the communion of the people is appointed to follow "immediately after that the priest himself hath received the sacrament," without any purification or ablution; and there is no break in the service until the conclusion, when the priest, still we must suppose at the altar rails, lets the people depart with a blessing. Can anybody explain what he was to do then? was he to go back alone to the altar, whilst the congregation were leaving the church and say the rest of the service? were the communion and postcommunion to be left unsaid? was he to be allowed to return that at least he might remove as reverently as he could the paten and chalice, or was he also to go away with the people? In a word, what was he to do?

It is necessary to give some account of the editions which have been used in preparing the following arrangement of the English and Roman liturgies.

The Roman use is printed from the edition by Plantin, Antwerp, 1759, 4to.

The Hereford use has been taken from an edition of that missal in the Bodleian library. It is supposed that the Hereford missal was printed only once. This supposition, however, rests on the fact that we have no evidence of more than one edition. It is rash to argue that books were never printed, merely because copies are not known to exist now. When the second edition of the present book was published, in the year 1846, no other copies were believed to exist than two in the Bodleian library, and one in the library of St. John's college, Oxford. One of the Bodleian copies is on vellum; both are imperfect, and unfortunately will not between them give us the perfect book. The imperfection is happily of no great extent; being limited to an erasure in the canon (see p. 179, and the note); but, nevertheless, there is an imperfection.

In the year 1855 I had the good fortune to hear of a fourth copy of the Hereford missal; and this, on examination, proved to be perfect; and not merely perfect, but large and sound; in short, a very beautiful copy.²⁰ This is now in the British museum.

The Hereford missal is a handsome folio, printed at Rouen in 1502. The following are the title and the colophon.

Title: "Anno Incarnationis domini secundo supra quingentesimum atque millesimum, die vero prima mensis Septembris, opera et industria M. Petri oliverii et Iohannis mauditier Impressorum Rothomagi, iuxta sacellum diui apostolorum principis Petri commorantium. Impensa vero Iohannis richardi mercatoris: hoc novum et egregium opus sacri Missalis ad usum famose ac percelebris ecclesie Helfordensis nuper instanti ac peruigili cura visum correctum et emendatum. Necnon auctoritate reuerendi in Christo patris et domini ejusdem ecclesie epyscopi meritissimi, ac dominorum decani et capituli: est in propatulo venale facili precio coram cunctis productum et exhibitum."

Colophon: "Finis Missalis ad vsum celebris ecclesie Helfordensis. summa cura ac vigili opera nuper Impressi Rothomagi cum additione, Accentuarii legentibus in ecclesiis valde vtili. Et hoc impensis Iohannis richardi eiusdem Rothomagi civis non immeriti: iuxta ecclesiam diui nicholai commorantis." The short title at the head of the service for the first sunday in advent is, "Incipit missale secundum vsum Herfordensem."

The York use is taken from an edition of that missal in my possession [1846];²¹ 4to. Title: "Mis-

Ere et impensis honestorum virorum Guillermi bernard et Jacobi cousin, bibliopolarum, Rothomagi degentium ante atrium librariorum majoris ecclesie, atque in ipso atrio e regione curie ecclesiastice. Anno salutis christiane decimoseptimo supra millesimum et quingentesimum, die vero vicesimasexta mensis octobris completum." This edition has not a colophon.²²

The York missal is a book of extreme rarity; Sir Harris Nicolas says²³ "it is doubtful whether any perfect copy exists, except the one preserved at Cambridge in the library of St. John's college."²⁴ This however is incorrect, because copies of five editions are now known to be extant.²⁵ In the British museum is a fragment of a York missal, which has been long supposed to be of an unknown edition; in fact it is a part of the edition of 1516, Rothom. fol.

The Sarum use is printed from a copy of the edition of that missal in my possession [1846],²⁶ of 1492, at Rouen, in folio. This is the only perfect²⁷

copy known, and in all respects a very important book. Until a few years ago this was believed to be the editio princeps of the Sarum missal, but it is not mentioned by Gough, or Brunet, or Hain;²⁸ all of whom speak of the edition of 1494, by John Hertzog, as the first.²⁹ The title is simply upon otherwise a blank leaf, "Missale secundum vsum ecclesie sarisburieñ." Then follow a calendar and the "benedictio salis et aquæ;" after which, under a woodcut, begins the service for the first sunday in advent with the usual title, "Incipit missale secundum vsum Sar." Before the canon is a large woodcut (the reverse blank) representing the first Person of the ever-blessed Trinity, with the evangelistic symbols in the corners, and below is a cross. The colophon: "Impensa et arte magři Martini morin civis Rothomagensis iuxta isignem prioratum sancti laudi eiusdem ciuitatis moram trahentis officium sacrum ad vsum sar. (ut vulgo loqmur) missale dictum, sollerti correctionis lima nuper castigatum et impressum: finit feliciter. Anno domini M.CCCC.lxxxxii. die xii. Octobris." Upon the reverse is the printer's device, viz. a negro's head and the letters M.M. within a circle supporting a double cross, with the Richard. Until lately [1846] this vellum part was supposed to be of about the same date and is so entered in the library catalogue.

²⁹ There was one other edition during this century; printed in England by Julian Notary, folio, with this colophon: "In laudem sanctissime Trinitatis totiusque milicie celestis ad honorem et decorem scē ecclesie

following legend in the border, "Imprime. A. Rouen. Devant. Sainct. Lo.," in gothic letters.³⁰

No printed copy of the Bangor use has been discovered. If there ever was an edition it has so far as we know utterly perished, perhaps by the common accidents of time but more probably by means of the eager inquisitors under Edward the sixth. I have arranged the ordinary and canon according to the use of Bangor from a manuscript written somewhere about the year 1400; a large folio, upon vellum. The evidence is not sufficient that it is certainly that use, but I conceive there are some reasonable grounds for supposing it to be so. It is undoubtedly an English missal, and not strictly according to the uses either of Sarum, York, or Hereford. A very slight examination even of the small portion reprinted in this volume will be sufficient to establish this; a point confirmed by variations in the collects and offices throughout the book.

But I would mention particularly the ordo sponsalium. This agrees with the prayers and order in the famous pontifical according to the use of Bangor, still preserved in the cathedral library of that city; to which it was given in the year 1485 by Richard Ednam, the then bishop.³¹ That pontifical does not, however, contain the forms of giving troth and at the putting on of the ring; which were anciently in the great majority of such books it was preserved, and restored to the library by bishop Humphreys in 1701. all the missals, in English; and I cannot think it altogether out of place to give them at length.

In the Salisbury missal the man is directed to say: "I, N, take the, N, to my weddyd wyf to haue and tho holde from thys day far warde for beter, for wurs, for ryche for porer: in sykenisse and in helthe tyl deth us deperte yf holy chyrche wol it ordeyne, and therto I plyght the my trouth." The woman repeats the same form, adding after the words and in helthe, "to be bonour and buxum³² in bed and at borde." At the putting on of the ring the man says: "With tys ring I the wedde and tys gold and siluer I te geue: and with my body I te worscype and wyth all my worldly catell I the honore."

The York missal directs both the man and woman to say as follows: "Here I take the, N, to my wedded wyfe or husband, to have and to holde at bedde and at borde, for fayrer, for fowler, for better for warse, in sikenes and in hele (or helth) tyll dethe us departe. And therto I plyght the my trouthe." Putting on the ring:³³ "With this rynge I wedde the and with this golde and siluer I honoure the, and with this gyft I honoure the."

The Hereford missal directs the man to say: "I, N, underfynge þe, N, for my wedded wyf, for ³² There are more meanings than one given to this old English word. In this place it signifies "obedience." The dictionaries do not commonly mention the privative form of the word, which, however, leads us to the true meaning, and occurs in Hylton's Medled lyfe, printed by R. Wyer, p. 4: "Also it longeth to all yonge begynnynge men, the which come newe out of worldly synnes to the seruyce of god: for to make them able to ghostly werkyng, & for to breke down the unbuxumness of the body by discrecion."

³³ The old books, both Salisbury and York, say upon the fourth finger "quia in illo digito est quædam vena procedens usque ad cor."

betere for worse, for richer for porer, yn sekenes and in helpe, tyl deþ us departe, as holy churche haþ ordeyned, and þerto y plygth þe my trovþe." The woman repeats the same, with the addition after the word helpe, "to be boxum to þe." Giving the ring the man says: "Wyþ þys ryng y þe wedde, and þys gold in seluer ych þe zeue, and vvyþ myne body ych þe honoure."

In my manuscript the form appointed for the man is: "I N, tak þe, N, to my weddyd wyf to haue and to holde from thys day forward, for bettere for werse, for fayrere for fowlere, for rychere for porere, in syknesse and in helthe tyl deþ us depart gyf holy cherche yt wole ordeyne. And therto y plyghte the my trewthe." The woman repeats the same, adding after the word helpe, "to be boneere and buxum in all lawfulle placys." The form at the giving of the ring is: "Wyth thys ring I þe wedde and ys gold and syluer I þe zeve and wyth my bodi the wourchepe and wyth all my worldli catell I the onore and endue."

I repeat that I am far from saying that such variations³⁴ prove this missal to be certainly the Bangor use, whilst joined with others they may possibly suggest a doubt whether it is Sarum; and it is certainly neither York nor Hereford. I humbly leave the question to the consideration of men better learned in the subject than myself, trusting that it may at least lead to further enquiry among

³⁴ Nor is it to be forgotten that the canon of the Bangor pontifical (that is, so much of it as that manuscript contains) has scarcely a variation which militates against the claim of the missal to be of Bangor use, whilst there are some remarkable points of agreement which may be taken to strengthen it. Of these the reader will himself be able to judge, by examining them as they are pointed out in the notes below.

English records. There are probably uncollated and neglected manuscripts in our public and cathedral libraries, which may some day decide without doubt what the Bangor use was. The whole question of the ancient English uses is one upon which little labour has been bestowed until very recently.³⁵

A note in the handwriting of the age, at the end of the calendar, fixes the book to have belonged to a church in a part of the country where the use of Bangor was probably observed. It is as follows: "This booke was geuen to the hye alter of the paryshe church of Oswestry by Sr.³⁶ Morys Griffith prist, To pray for all Christen soules, the yere of oure Lorde god a thowsande fyve hundred fyfty and foure." The book was in all likelihood removed from the church during the troubles of king Edward's time, was carefully preserved, and possibly for a ³⁵ There are unquestionably many imperfect manuscripts and printed editions of missals of various uses in our public libraries, which have been catalogued (and therefore neglected) under the very convenient title of Roman missal. The reprints in the last few years of the York and Hereford missals will probably lead to the discovery of other copies; and so we may hope also to discover even the lost Lincoln use, or assure ourselves of the Bangor.

A small fragment of Lincoln use, from a manuscript in the Bodleian, is printed at the end of the second volume of the York missal, published by the Surtees society. It contains only the offices for the first and second and third sundays in Advent, with those for the week-days of the same time, and for the wednesday in ember week. The service is with very trivial variations, and excepting the epistles and gospels for one or two of the days, the same as in the Sarum missal. This fragment agrees equally and to the same extent with the missals of York and Hereford.

short time restored after queen Mary's accession. There was anciently at Oswestry a monastery, the church of which was made the parish church and is described by Leland in his Itinerary.³⁷

If in the first edition of this arrangement of the ancient liturgies I trusted that it would not be an unacceptable book, I may now perhaps, after an interval of so many years, allow myself to believe that in some measure my hope has been fulfilled. The circumstances of the times in which we live seem to call for a more general knowledge of such subjects, especially among the clergy of the reformed church of England. Studies of this kind must not be looked upon as merely antiquarian, or even historical, but as of the highest importance in their relation to questions involving doctrine. That temper of mind we may trust is rapidly passing away in which English clergymen have feared to come in contact, as with unholy things, with the ancient liturgies and offices (which are indeed the monuments) of the English church. Men were long accustomed to speak slightly, and with harsh words also, of holy prayers which for a thousand years rose through the aisles of our village equally with our cathedral churches, and of solemn rites by which devotion was not only quickened but directed to its proper end.

It may be said that the original editions of these books are of such extreme rarity as to be completely beyond the reach of all who have not access to public libraries. When therefore men, by one sweeping condemnation, contemptuously passed judgment upon the old services and worship of the church of England, they spoke of matters about which they knew absolutely nothing, and without the slightest discrimination included within one sentence both good and bad, essentials and non-essentials, trivial or sometimes even superstitious rites and holy ceremonies. Nor did they care to recollect that the common Prayer book now used in their church is founded upon and draws its origin from the very sources about which they did not hesitate to utter these opinions. Such a judgment may perhaps be popular, may be widely received, but is worth nothing.

“¶ Oratio dicenda ante missam. Deus qui de indignis dignos, de peccatoribus justos, de immundis mundos facis: munda cor et corpus meum ab omni contagione et sorde peccati, et fac me dignum altaribus tuis ministrum, et concede propitius: ut in hoc altari ad quod indignus accedo, hostias acceptabiles offeram pietati tuæ pro peccatis et offensionibus meis, et innumeris quotidianisque excessibus; et pro omnibus hic circumstantibus, universisque mihi familiaritate et affinitate conjunctis, atque me odio aliquo insectantibus et adversantibus, cunctisque fidelibus Christianis vivis et mortuis: et per eum sit tibi meum votum atque sacrificium acceptabile: qui se tibi Deo Patri obtulit in sacrificium, Jesus Christus, Filius tuus, Dominus noster. Qui tecum vivit et regnat.” Missale Sarum. edit. 1492. Some editions add (as all doubtless understand) “in unitate Spiritus sancti, Deus.” Two or three other prayers are added, to be said at the option of the priest. The York missal has a very long prayer believed to have been written by St. Augustine.

It will be observed that the York use makes no mention of any vestments, and the Hereford speaks only of the amice and the alb. We must remember that though now they are lost, there were formerly numerous other volumes in which complete instructions were to be found for the due vesting of both the celebrant and his assistants: in the missal sometimes they were but alluded to, at other times omitted altogether. There cannot be a shadow of doubt that the full number of vestments was required by the order of the church of Hereford as well as by the church of Salisbury: and if one would argue from this rubric "postquam sacerdos induerit se amictum et albam" that the chasuble (for example) was not also necessary, he might as well attempt to prove from the York rubric that in that diocese the celebrant was not vested at all, and was simply to wash his hands. The following is a canon of an early council: "Nullus presbyter sine amictu, alba, et stola, et fanone, et casula ullatertus missam celebrare præsumat. Et hæc sacra vestimenta mundissima sint, et in nitido loco intra ecclesiam collocentur. Nec presbyter, cum his induitur, extra ecclesiam exeat: quia hoc lex divina prohibet." Regino Prumiensis, De ecc. discip. lib. i. p. 57.

² (Lavat manus suas. Ebor.) I cannot decide whether the ceremonial rite of washing the hands was peculiar to the church of York, as the other English uses omit any mention of it: nor, whether in that and in the church of Hereford the hymn Veni Creator and prayers were said at the putting on of the vestments. It is not probable that the washing would be omitted; an observance so universal and one which, although a mere ceremony, almost the light of nature would suggest. Euclio says (as cited by cardinal Bona) "Nunc lavabo ut rem divinam faciam." Apud Plautum, in Aulularia, iv. 2. The Christian church has observed it from the earliest ages. St. Paul possibly alludes to it in his epistle to Timothy: "I will therefore that men pray everywhere, lifting up holy hands;" ep. i. c. ii. This, we must remember, just after he has been speaking of the blessed eucharist. Tertullian asks: "Quæ ratio est, manibus quidem ablutis, spiritu

The "Veni creator" and the prayer "Deus cui omne" or "Largire sensibus" were said in the sacristy before entering the church: from the first antiphon "Introibo" &c. to "Aufer a nobis" below the steps leading up to the altar.

Postea lavat manus, dicens orationem: 'Da, Domine, virtutem manibus meis ad abstergendam omnem maculam: ut sine pollutione mentis et corporis valeam tibi servire.'"

The Roman missal can be procured by any one: I shall therefore refer the reader to it and recommend him to read carefully, if he wishes to understand the subject, the "Ritus servandus in celebratione missæ" at the beginning of the book.

Quidam tamen, subdit ille, a sinistra producunt in dexteram, quia de miseria transire debemus ad gloriam, sicut et Christus de morte transivit ad vitam." Gavanti, Thes. sac. rituum, tom. i. p. 170. And so St. Ambrose has said; that we make the sign of the cross upon our forehead, that we may always be bold to confess: upon our breast, that we may remember to love: upon our arm, that we may be ready at all times to work.

Venerable Bede insists strongly upon the necessity of teaching the people to use this sign: he is writing to archbishop Egbert: "Eorum quoque, qui in populari adhuc vita continentur, sollicitam te necesse est curam gerere, ut. .sufficientes eis doctores vitæ salutaris adhibere memineris, et hoc eos inter alia discere facias, quibus operibus maxime Deo placere, a quibus se debeant, qui Deo placere desiderant, abstinere peccatis,. .qua divinam clementiam supplicantes debeant devotione precari, quam frequenti diligentia signaculo se dominicæ crucis, suaque omnia adversum continuas immundorum spirituum insidias, necesse habeant munire," &c. Beda, Op. hist. minora, p. 221. The archbishop also himself thus writes in his penitential: "Dilecte mi, ego te hortor, ut cogites, &c. . . Cum mane primum surrexeris, signa te diligentissime, et Deo commenda." Thorpe, vol. 2. p. 227. Ælfric speaks of the sign as "the sign of the rood;" Homilies, p. 73.

The sign of the cross has been removed from the order for the Administration of the Lord's Supper, in the common Prayer book, since 1552. The proper use of the holy sign may well be defended upon many grounds, but not a superstitious or improper excess.

Speaking in another place upon this sign of the cross, Merati says in his additions to Gavantus, tom. ii. p. 108,

⁶ It frequently happened in large parishes or in cathedrals and churches of monasteries that more than one mass would be said at the same time. These would be of course at different altars, and very seldom would begin together. Unless I am mistaken, there is no rubric in any English missal referring to this practice, but there is the following in an “Ordo missæ” printed at Rome in 1511: “Postquam id [In nomine &c.] dixerit non debet advertere quemcunque in alio altari celebrantem etiam si sacramentum eleve; sed continue prosequi missam suam usque in finem.” We can scarcely doubt that the same rule was observed according to the English uses after the Introibo.

prayer; neither at any time did the Roman. It is now used at the beginning of the communion service of the reformed church of England, immediately before the reading of the ten commandments.

An early translation occurs on a blank leaf between two treatises in English, forming part of a volume of religious tracts which seems formerly to have belonged to the Carthusian monastery of Mount Grace in Yorkshire: the manuscript is of about the year 1420:—

“God, vnto whome alle hertes bene opene, and vnto whome alle wylle spekyth, and vnto whome no prive thing is hyd, I beseche the for to cence the entent of myn herte w^t the vnspekeable gift of the holy goste, that I may perfytely loue the and worthyliche prayse the, and also haue the here by grace and in heuene be joy euerlastynge. ⁹ The preceding prayers according to the uses of Sarum, Bangor, and York, having been said in the sacristy, the priest proceeded to the altar. I do not remember any direction as to whether his head should be covered or uncovered. Possibly in the mediæval church of England the earlier practice, observed almost everywhere throughout the west until the tenth century, was still the rule and the priest wore nothing on his head. For many centuries the Roman use has ordered the contrary, and so it is directed by the present rubrics: "Sacerdos omnibus paramentis indutus . . . capite cooperto accedit ad altare . . . cum pervenerit ad altare, stans ante illius infimum gradum, caput detegit, biretum ministro porrigit, et altari profunde inclinat."

"His abluta plebs" (are his words) "dives insignibus ad Christi contendit altaria dicens, Introibo," &c. There is no doubt however that it was very anciently used in this place, for Micrologus says, cap. 23: "paratus, sacerdos venit ad altare dicens antiphonam."

¹² (Judica me. Sar.) From almost the earliest ages of which records remain, we find evidence that the liturgy began with a psalm: but it was not universal; and for the four first centuries at least there was a variety of practice. It is not possible to decide what psalms in particular were appointed, or even whether in the first ages the later practice of a fixed psalm was observed. Durand says, lib. iv. cap. 7, that pope Cœlestin the first originally appointed this particular psalm. This would have been about the year 430. But it would seem from an old ordo Romanus that Cœlestin merely ratified the custom of saying a psalm. A French ritualist of little or no authority, Claude de Vert (of some considerable learning, but excessive prejudice towards many peculiar conceits of his

The Mozarabic liturgy appoints the antiphon, but omits the psalm. The Roman liturgy follows the same rule in masses

But the antiphon is not omitted: which is said to be because though the signs of joy are not allowed at such times, yet the reason and the motive may nevertheless be spoken of: and therefore the priest may still say: "Introibo ad altare Dei, ad Deum qui lætificat juventutem meam."

The above is taken from a very curious and important manuscript in the museum library, MS. Bibl. Reg. 17. B. xvi. xvij, consisting of long rubrics and prayers relating to the liturgy, all in English verse.

In the second edition of this book I referred to this manuscript as the "Museum manuscript;" but the poem has lately been printed for the early English text society; admirably edited by the Rev. T. F. Simmons, canon of York, with an excellent introduction and an appendix of very valuable and learned notes. Canon Simmons calls it "the Lay Folks mass book:" and by that name I shall refer to the manuscript as we proceed.

prayers of His saints. In Genesis, Abimelech (we read) was told that if he restored his wife to Abraham the patriarch should pray for him, and he should live. "Now, therefore, restore the man his wife; for he is a prophet: and he shall pray for thee, and thou shalt live;" ch. xx. ver. 7. And again, in the 42nd chap. of Job, ver. 7, Eliphaz and his two friends, against whom the wrath of the Lord was kindled, are directed to "go to my servant Job, . . and my servant Job shall pray for you: for him will I accept."

In the most ancient offices we find forms of confession and absolution before the more solemn part of the liturgy: they are in the liturgy of St. James, which next to the Clementine is acknowledged as the oldest extant. The Gallican liturgy contains them, under another name, Apologia; and several forms are in the sacramentary of St. Gregory. The present form in the Roman missal, it will be observed, varies very materially from the Sarum and other English uses. It has been ascribed, that is, in its present state, to pope Damasus: but without any authority, as the best commentators allow. Archbishop Egbert alludes to the English form of confession in his penitential.

²² It was a common practice, as every reader of ecclesiastical history must know, for the primitive Christians to meet for the offering and service of the communion not only in any secret place but especially in those places where martyrs had suffered or where their remains were buried. Hence, after the persecutions ceased and leave was given that churches might openly be frequented, not unnaturally the first churches were built in places near or in which people had already been accustomed to assemble. And thus probably arose the very ancient and general custom that no church should be consecrated without relics of the martyrs. Cardinal Bona endeavours to prove that the rule is as early as before the council of Nice, and there can be no doubt that it is of high antiquity and soon passed into a law. For not to insist upon passages from St. Ambrose (epist. 54), from St. Jerome, and St. Augustine (which are appealed to by most writers upon the subject, and which unquestionably prove how widely the practice was spreading in their respective times), it was ordered by the seventh canon of the second council of Nice that no bishop should consecrate any church or altar on pain of deposition unless relics were placed under it: “ut qui ecclesiasticas traditiones transgressus est.”

The Roman pontifical orders: “Sero ante diem dedicationis, pontifex parat reliquias, ponens eas in decenti et mundo vasculo, cum tribus granis thuris; sigillans ipsum vasculum diligenter,” &c.

In the year 816, the second canon of the council of Chalcuith is “De modo consecrandi ecclesias:” and orders; “Postea eucharistia, quæ ab episcopo per idem ministerium consecratur, cum aliis reliquiis condatur in capsula, ac servetur in eadem basilica. Et si alias reliquias intimare non potest, tamen hoc maxime proficere potest quia corpus et sanguis est Domini nostri Jesu Christi." Wilkins, Concilia, tom. i. p. 169. There is a reference in one of the canons of a council at Oxford, A.D. 1222, to a custom which also prevailed, viz. of placing corporals under altars: "vetera vero corporalia quæ non fuerint idonea in altaribus, quando consecrantur, loco reliquiarum reponantur, vel in præsentia archidiaconi comburantur." Wilkins, tom. i. p. 587. Upon this statute Lyndwood says, "Loco reliquiarum. Sine quibus altaria consecrari non debent." lib. iii. tit. 26. But he goes on to say that they are not of the substance of the consecration: "Unde licet reliquiæ non sint de substantia consecrationis altaris, ubi tamen non habentur reliquiæ, solent aliqui apponere corpus Christi." This is according to the old decree above of the council of Chalcuith. But Lyndwood cites several authorities why such a practice was not to be allowed: "Non decere corpus Domini recondi in altari." (Lyndwood does not say this, but refers to Hostiensis, In summa, and I suppose it to be the place intended. See also Durant, de rit. lib. i. cap. xxv.) "Alia ratio est, quia corpus Christi est cibus animæ: item, quia non debet servari, nisi ad opus infirmorum: et non debet poni ad alium usum quam ad eum pro quo institutum est, nam debet comedi. . . Quod tamen corporale vel ejus pars detur in consecratione altaris loco reliquiarum, non videtur esse absurdum." From this gloss of Lyndwood, if any argument could be wanted, we might learn how unfounded is the remark which Johnson (Eccles. laws, vol. i. p. 816) makes upon the canon of Chalcuith; that in it "the eucharistic symbols are set on a level with the relics of the saints, and scarce that neither." He utterly mistook the object of the canon: which is to be wondered at in a writer of so great a reputation.

²³ (Thurificet. Sar.) The use of incense in the public services of the church is of the most remote antiquity. Incense was among the few offerings which were allowed to be made at the altar to be there consumed, as appears from the second of the apostolical canons. The object of burning incense seems to be well expressed in the prayer which is found in the liturgy of St. John Chrysostom, according to the translation in Goar's collection: "Incensum tibi offerimus Christe Deus in odorem suavitatis spiritualis, quem suscipe Domine in sanctum et supercœleste ac intellectuale tuum altare, et repende nobis abundantes tuas miserationes, et illas largire nobis servis tuis." Goar, Rituale Græc. p. 62.

the right means the Epistle side, and the left the Gospel side. The custom was the same in all the old Roman orders up to the end of the fifteenth century; taking it to be the right hand and the left of the officiating priest, as well as of those who were standing by. But in the year 1485 the Roman pontifical, published at Venice, laid down as a rule that the right hand and the left were to be taken from the crucifix upon the altar: by which new arrangement of course the old was entirely reversed. See on this subject especially Sala's notes to Bona, tom. iii. p. 49, and Le Brun, tom. i. p. 77, note. Thus the general rubric of the present Roman missal makes an explanation, which since the adoption of the new rule has been indispensable: "Accedit ad cornu ejus sinistrum, id est, epistolæ; ubi stans, incipit Introitum," &c. Ritus celebr. tit. iv. 2:

²⁶ (Officium. Ebor.) More commonly called in later years the introit, "Introitus:" as in the Roman use. In the Milan or Ambrosian missal it is called Ingressa. For an account of its first institution and other particulars the student should consult Bona, tom. ii. p. 48, and Gerbert, de musica, tom. i. p. 100. These introits, as is well known, were retained in the first revised liturgy of king Edward the sixth. They kept their old name of Introit long after the real reason why they were so called had ceased; namely, because they were sung at the entrance or approach of the priest to the altar. Upon which point all the old writers agree. See Micrologus, cap. i, Rupert. de divinis off. cap. 28, Raban. cap. 23. It was to the introit that the tropes were added, when they were introduced: "Tropus proprie est quidam versiculus, qui in præcipuis festivitatis cantatur immediate ante introitum, quasi quoddam præambulum, et continuatio ipsius introitus." Durand, lib. iv. cap. 5.

There is a curious account in the Concilia of a royal charter being sealed and confirmed in the presence of the king (Henry the second) at this part of the mass; tom. i. p. 429.

In this rubric we have two officers of the choir mentioned; the cantor, and the rector chori. There seems to have been two of the last named: who probably answer to the precentor and succentor of St. Isidore: "Cantor vocatur, quia vocem modulatur in cantu. Hujus duo genera dicuntur in arte musica; præcentor et succentor: præcentor scilicet, qui vocem præmittit in cantu, succentor autem qui subsequenter canendo respondet." Apud Gratian. dist. xxi. c. i. If there were two of these, they stood each at the end of his own side of the choir, and having received the necessary information from the cantor who, as we shall see, stood in the centre, passed it on to his companions: Amalarius speaks of one præcentor as opposed to the succentores: "Præcentor in primo ordine finit responsorium. Succentores vero eodem modo respondent. Dein præcentor canit versum," &c. De ord. antiph. cap. 18; Bibl. patrum auct. tom. i. p. 527.

The name "rector chori" appears to have been if not peculiar to England yet chiefly adopted in her churches. Ducange cites but one authority for it, from a Sarum breviary; and explains it to be the same as "cantor:" in which I cannot but believe him to be in error, though I speak with hesitation against so great an authority. But the rubric at the head of this note seems to put the matter beyond a doubt: and I shall add to it the following account of the duties of the cantor. First, from the statutes of archbishop Lanfranc, cap. v; with which agrees almost in word a statute of Evesham monastery, Dugdale, Monast. vol. ii. p. 39: "De cantore.

Cantor vero, in medio eorum debet eſſe in choro: . . et in dextro choro ſemper ſit.” Lanfranc, Opera, p. 279. Again from the manuſcript conſuetudinary of Sarum, early in the thirteenth century: “Cantoris officium eſt chorum in cantuum elevatione et depressione regere vel per ſe, vel per ſuccentorem ſuum, et in omni duplici feſto lectiones legendas canonicis præſentibus injungere, cantores, lectores, et miniſtros altaris in tabula ordinare. . . The cantor was in this ſenſe the ſame as the præcentor, properly ſo called; and not (as I have ſuggeſted above) as Iſidore uſes the word, for a rector chori: ſo that there might be more than one precentor, as we find in an epiſtle of Hincmar, cited by Ducange, verb. præcentor: “præcentores, qui chorum utrinque regunt, ſunt duces,” &c. But the precentor ſtrictly was “primus cantorum in eccleſia; qui cantoribus præeſt.” The biſhop of Salisbury is precentor (or “chaunter” as the old puritan author of “the life of the ſeventy arch-biſhopp of Canterbury” calls him; ſign. Compare also lib. ii. tit. 3, verb. usum Sarum. It has been supposed that this distinction arose from the fame of the Salisbury use, and of bishop Osmund. Thomas archbishop of York, A.D. 1100, is said to have first appointed a precentor in that cathedral; Collier, Eccl. hist. vol. i. p. 281.

A curious collection of signals by which the cantor made known his will to the choir are given by Gerbert, from some foreign monastic statutes. These are all to be made by various movements of the hand and fingers. De musica sacra, tom. i. p. 310, note a.

²⁸ (Kyrie eleison. iij. Ebor.) It appears from the sixth chapter of the eighth book of the Apostolical constitutions (quoted by Le Brun, vol. i. p. 80) that the prayer “Kyrie eleison” was used by the faithful in behalf of the catechumens, “that God would be pleased to illumine them with the light of His gospel, and fill them with the grace of His holy Spirit.” This prayer of course occurred before the dismissal of the catechumens and the beginning of the solemn part, the canon.

In the ritualists (vide especially Durant) many reasons may be found, some sufficiently fanciful, why these Kyrie were retained in the Greek and not translated into Latin. I shall give the observation of cardinal Bona upon the point: “Dicunt Latini in missa Kyrie eleison Græce, dicunt etiam Hebraice Amen, Allelujah, Sabaoth, et Osanna: quia fortassis sic ab initio ecclesiasticarum precum institutores voces istas usurparunt, ut ostenderent unam esse ecclesiam, quæ ex Hebrais et Græcis primum, deinde ex Latinis coadunata est:

Sed quæcumque fuerit causa hujus institutionis, certissimum est eam antiquissimam esse." Tom. iii. p. 73.

Sala in his additions offers three reasons for the repetition of the Kyrie nine times: "Novem vicibus hanc precationem repetimus, contra triplicem miseriam ignorantiae, culpæ, et pœnæ; vel, ut tres personas in se mutuo inexistere significetur, ac propterea in iis proprietas, et in essentia unitas, et in majestate adoretur æqualitas, et ad imitationem cantus angelorum, qui in novem ordinum choros distincti sunt; vel, ut contra novem genera peccatorum divina impleretur misericordia, scilicet originale, veniale mortale: cogitationis, locutionis, et operis: fragilitatis per impotentiam, simplicitatis per ignorantiam, malignitatis per invidentiam, hoc est peccatum in Patrem, peccatum in Filium, et peccatum in Spiritum sanctum."

Upon certain festivals these Kyrie were appointed in the English church to be sung with several verses added to the original words. As, for example, upon the double feasts was to be sung either "Kyrie rex genitor;" or, "Kyrie fons bonitatis;" or, "Kyrie omnipotens pater," or two or three others, at the choice of the precentor. Upon the feast of the epiphany was appointed always, "Kyrie fons bonitatis." Upon St. Michael's day "Kyrie rex splendens," which also Very anciently, and indeed it has been supposed up to the year 1000, only bishops were permitted to say this hymn, except on easter-day when priests also were allowed. Walafrid Strabo, cap. 22, says, "statutum est, ut ipse hymnus in summis festivitibus a solis episcopis usurparetur, quod etiam in capite libri sacramentorum designatum videtur." Cardinal Bona, tom. iii. p. 85, cites a very early missal, now in the Vatican, with this regulation (which Strabo appears to mean) at the beginning: "Dicitur Gloria in excelsis Deo si episcopus fuerit, tantummodo die dominico, sive diebus festis. A presbyteris autem minime dicitur, nisi in solo pascha." An old anonymous writer, in a book called Speculum ecclesiæ, says that this hymn was sung only once in the year, on the day of the Nativity: and further, that in the first service it was sung in Latin, in the second in Greek. Benedict XIV, Opera, tom. ix. p. 81.

³² This, as is well known, is called the angelical hymn, from the first few words having been sung by the angels at the nativity of our Redeemer. By whom the remainder was added is the subject of much dispute. Some ascribe it to Telesphorus, bishop of Rome about A.D. 130; Innocent, De mysteriis, c. 20. Alcuin, De div. off. cap. xl, gives it to Hilary of Poitiers, and with him agree Hugo, de div. off. cap. xj, and the author of the Gemma animæ, lib. i. 87: but against these (and others who may be mentioned) Bona observes that St. Athanasius, a contemporary of Hilary, speaks of the hymn with its additions as well known in his own time. The fathers of one of the councils (iv. Tolet. can. 12) could not err when they cautiously observed, "reliqua quæ sequuntur post verba angelorum, ecclesiasticos doctores composuisse." This hymn is called by the Greeks the great doxology; and is said by them at their morning prayer. In many manuscripts of the Latin church, especially in the most ancient, it is added to the end of the psalter with the Apostles'

The Salisbury, Bangor, and Hereford missals add several interpolations which were appointed to be said at certain festivals of the blessed Virgin or services in her chapel. They begin after the "Domine fili unigenite Jesu Christe," and continue thus: "Spiritus et almæ orphanorum Paraclyte. . . Filius Patris. Primogenitus Mariæ virginis matris. Qui tollis . . . deprecationem nostram. Ad Mariæ gloriam. . . tu solus sanctus. Mariam sanctificans. Tu solus dominus. Mariam gubernans. Tu solus altissimus. Mariam coronans," &c. The rubric is (after sundry directions for other times) "nisi quando, &c. . . tunc enim dicitur sequens cantus cum sua farsura, videlicet in choro. Et etiam dicitur cum sua prosa in quotidianis missis in capella beatæ Mariæ omni sabbato. . . In omnibus aliis missis quando dicendum est: dicitur sine prosa." Rubric. Sar. Although Clichtoveus in his Elucidation (p. 137) says that these interpolations were appointed "secundum ecclesiæ catholicæ ritum," it is highly probable that they were local introductions which by degrees crept into more general observance. Two examples are given by Pamelius of other similar additions made to this most glorious hymn; Liturg. tom. xi.

See also Mabillon, Mus. Ital. tom. ii. p. 17. But by the time when Micrologus wrote, in the eleventh century, the practice had become general for priests to say the hymn as well as bishops. ³⁹ The last words of the conclusion rest upon the authority of St. Jude, who so ends his epistle; and are used in the primitive liturgies of St. James, St. Basil, St. Chrysostom, and the Clementine.

The number three, five, or seven, to one of which the number of collects was limited, was symbolical also of the earnest desire of the Church for unity, which is expressed by an uneven number. Anciently only one collect was said, whence probably the name of it; because in one prayer many were collected together: in the Gelasian sacramentary the number is usually three. Afterwards an excess happened in the other direction, and a rule was made that they should not be more than seven. See Martene, de ant. ecc. ritibus, lib. i. cap. 4, who quotes Beletus and Durand. The author of the Gemma animæ says: "qui hunc numerum supergressus fuerit, ut cæcus errabit." Cap. 116.

It gives also examples from various collects of each conclusion, according to the rules laid down. The *Rubricæ generales miss. highest doctrines of the Faith. It has been asserted that in the first four centuries all the prayers at celebration of the eucharist were addressed solely to God the Father: "ut in altari semper ad Patrem dirigatur oratio" are certainly the words of the third council of Carthage, canon 23. Florus Lugdunensis says, this was because the Christians feared lest the doctrine of the undivided Trinity might be misunderstood, and give countenance to the dreadful error of more gods than One God.

I shall make a short extract from cardinal Bona: "Ad solum Patrem omnes ferè collectæ directæ sunt, paucae ad Filium, nulla ad Spiritum sanctum: non quia is donum est, et a dono donum non petitur, ut nonnulli cum Durando in suo rationali philosophantur; sed quia missa repræsentatio est ejus oblationis, qua Christus se Patri obtulit, ac propterea ad ipsum Patrem liturgicæ preces diriguntur." ⁴³ Vide "De defectibus in celebr. missarum occurrentibus" in the Roman missal, tit. iij, iv. The English church from the earliest ages reiterated her injunctions as to the care which is necessary to be observed in providing proper elements for the holy eucharist. Take, for example: "Sacerdotes Dei diligenter semper procurent, ut panis et vinum et aqua, sine quibus nequaquam missæ celebrantur, pura et munda fiant; quia si aliter agatur, cum his qui acetum cum felle mixtum Domino optulerunt, nisi vera pœnitentia subvenerit, punientur." This from archbishop Egbert's excerpts (100th), A.D. 750; Thorpe, Anglo-saxon laws, ii. 111. About thirty years later, the tenth canon of the council of Chalcuith is headed "ut in missa . . . crusta panis non admittatur:" directing, "Oblationes quoque fidelium tales fiant, ut panis sit, non crusta." Wilkins, Concilia, tom. i. p. 147. It would be almost endless work to quote from the canons of councils and synods in the seven centuries succeeding. But two examples may be cited: one, from a council at London in 1246: "celebret sacerdos cum pane ex tritico purissimo." Concil. tom. i. p. 688. Another, in 1287, at Exeter: "Provideant igitur sacerdotes, quod oblatas habeant confectas de simula frumenti, et aqua duntaxat: ita quod nihil immisceatur fermenti. Sint et oblatae integre candidæ et rotundæ; nec per tantum tempus custodiantur, quod in sapore vel aspectu abominabiles habeantur." Ibid. tom. ii. p. 132. I shall only add further a rule among those which archbishop Lanfranc drew up for the order of St. Benedict, showing the excess of care which anciently was taken in this matter: "Ea autem die, qua hostiæ fieri debent, secretarius et fratres, qui eum juvare debent, antequam incipiant, manus et facies lavent, albis induantur, capita amictibus velent, præter eum, qui ferra tenturus, et inde serviturus est. Horum unus super tabulam mundissimam ipsam farinam aqua conspergat, et manibus fortiter compingat, et maceret, frater, qui ferra, in quibus coquuntur, tenet, manus chirothecis habeat involutas. Interim dum ipsæ hostiæ fiunt et coquuntur, dicant iidem fratres psalmos familiares horarum, et horas canonicas, et de psalterio ex ordine quod tantumdem valeat, si ita potius voluerint." Opera, p. 280.

There was no less care taken always with the wine than with the bread. One quotation must now suffice; from the constitutions of a synod of the diocese of Sodor and Man, A.D. 1350: "Summopere præcavescentes ne vinum cum quo celebratur sit corruptum, vel in acetum commutatum, et quod potius sit rubrum, quam album. In albo tamen bene conficitur sacrum, et non de aceto, cum in aceto mutantur omnes substantiales vires, et vinum vim amisit. Et aqua in tam modica quantitate apponatur, ut non vinum ab aqua, sed aqua a vino absorbeatur." The practice now of the Roman catholic church is to consecrate white wine, but the reformed English church uses red wine for her communions. Either red or white wine may be used: all which is required being that it should be of the pure juice of the grape. As the Pupilla says, "materia necessaria calicis est vinum de vite, id est, non vinum artificiale seu de alio fructu compressum. Nec refert an sit album an rubeum, spissum vel tenue, dum tamen sit verum vinum quoad effectum sacramenti; quamvis vinum rubeum sit præeligendum propter expressionem et similitudinem sanguinis." Cap. 3. Wine (says the author just previously) is of necessity "quia sanguis Christi de alia materia quam de vino vitis confici non potest." The canon just quoted goes on to speak of the host: "Hostia de frumento sit rotunda et integra, et sine macula: quia agnus extitit sine macula, et os non fuit comminutum ex eo. Unde versus:

Candida, triticea, tenuis, non magna, rotunda,
Expers fermenti, non mista sit hostia Christi, Inscribatur, aqua non cocta sed igne sit assa."

Wilkins, Concilia, tom. iii. p. 11.

It is of the highest consequence, affecting the integrity of the sacrament, that the bread should be of wheat and not of almonds or chestnuts or the such-like. But whether it be leavened or not is a subject to be decided by the authority of the Church. The rule is well laid down by the old English canonist just referred to: "Debet panis consecrandus esse azymus, id est, sine fermento, in signum quod Christus fuit sine fermento malitiæ. Unde sacerdos scienter consecrans panem fermentatum, quamvis conficeret, tamen graviter peccaret." Pupilla oculi, cap. 3.

Every priest therefore must follow the appointed order: otherwise it will be sufficient, provided only that the bread be of wheat and the wine of the juice of the grape. "Quæ sit species vini parum refert; modo revera sit vinum de vite." Van Espen, pars ii. sect. i. tit. 4. Let us add to all this the judgment of St. Anselm: "Quoniam multæ sunt diversitates, quæ non in substantia sacramenti, neque in virtute ejus, aut fide discordant, neque omnes in unam consuetudinem colligi possunt: æstimo eas potius in pace concorditer tolerandas, quam discorditer cum scandalo damnandas. Habemus enim a sanctis patribus, quia si unitas servatur charitatis in fide catholica, nihil officit consuetudo diversa." These are memorable words: but not less so are those by which they are preceded: "Utique si per universam ecclesiam uno modo et concorditer celebrarentur (i.e. sacramenta ecclesiæ) bonum esset et laudabile." Opera, p. 139. Compare also p. 135: "Et azymum et fermentatum sacrificans, sacrificat. Et cum legitur de Domino, quando corpus suum de pane fecit; quia

Occasionally, and possibly not seldom in some of the English colonies at least, a great latitude seems to be allowed in the Anglican communion with regard to the elements of the sacrament of the blessed Eucharist. Two instances may be quoted: and the only remark which I would presume to make on them is, that the one would rely by way of support on the supposed necessity of avoiding all risk of the sin of drunkenness, and that the other appears to have been prompted by an excess of devotion. But neither the one reason nor the other would have been allowed for an instant by the canons of the mediæval English church.

At Tahiti, four or five years ago, a party of English people went to the church of England service there: I say the English church service on the authority of the author, though not stated in the book from which I quote. After the christenings "there was a hymn . . . followed by administration of the sacrament, in which cocoa-nut milk took the place of wine, and bread-fruit that of bread. The proper elements were originally used, but experience proved that although the bread went round pretty well, the cup was almost invariably emptied by the first two or three communicants, sometimes with unfortunate results." Voyage of the Sunbeam, p. 234.

Dr. Hobhouse, the bishop of Nelson in New Zealand, sent home about the year 1860 the following account of a visit which he made to a dying native: "I came purposely to administer the holy communion; but I looked round in vain for the means—there was no wine nor any bread, but I could not go away without an endeavour to show the 'Lord's death' in some way as near to the Lord's own appointed way as circumstances permitted. I therefore made vessels of the beautiful mussel-shells which abound on the sea-beach, filling one with water and laying on the other a piece of travelling biscuit softened with water, and in this way I proceeded to celebrate the holy Sacrament of the Body and Blood of our sacrificed Saviour, not doubting but earnestly believing that he was pleased to grant to that truthful partaker as full a share in all the benefits of his passion as if a cathedral had been over our heads and golden vessels on the altar."

Compare also Rabanus Maurus: "Tunc lector legit lectionem canonicam." De institut. cleric. lib. i. cap. 33.

The custom of sitting to hear the epistle read is very ancient. Rupert the abbot, writing in the eleventh century, says, "Morale legis officium agit epistola, tantum distans ab eo, quod in officio missæ præcedit sancto evangelio, quantum servus a domino, præco a judice, legatus ab eo qui misit illum. Quapropter cum legitur, non injuria sedemus: cum autem sanctum evangelium audimus, demissis reverenter aspectibus sicut Domino nostro assistimus." De div. off. lib. i. cap. 32.

I take the following from the valuable publication of the Rites of the church of Durham: "When the monkes went to say or sing the high mass, they put on their vestments in the vestrye, both the epistoler and the gospeller. They were always revest in the same place, and when the office of the masse began to be sung the epistoler came out of the revestrie and the other two monkes following him, all three arow, and there did stand untill the Gloria Patri of the office of the masse began to be sunge, and then, with great reverence and devotion, they went all up to the high altar... The epistoler, when he had sung the epistle, did lay by the booke againe on the altar, and after, when the gospell was sunge, the gospeller did lay it downe on the altar untill the masse was done." p. 7.

⁴⁹ "Solebant autem antiquitus tam epistola quam evangelium legi in ambone seu pulpito." Bona, tom. iii. 127. Still it appears that a difference was observed in the reading of the two. Thus the one was read upon a lower step; as we see in the next note was the order of the church of Hereford, and according to the old "Expositio missæ," Bibl. patr. auct. tom. i. p. 1171: "Subdiaconus qui lecturus est, mox ut viderit post pontificem presbyteros residentes, ascendit in ambonem ut legat. Non tamen in superiorem gradum, quem solus solet ascendere qui evangelium lecturus est."

There was certainly also a great distinction in many churches between the place for saying the epistle and gospel of the service of the holy eucharist, and the lessons of the other offices. For example, at Durham: "At the north end of the high altar there was a goodly fine letteron of brasse, where they sung the epistle and the gospell, with a gilt pellican on the height of it, finely gilded, pullinge hir bloud out hir breast to hir young ones, and winges spread abroad, whereon did lye the book that they did sing the epistle and the gospel.... Also ther was lowe downe in the quere another lettorn of brasse, not so curiously wroughte, standing in the midst against the stalls, a marveilous faire one, with an eagle on the height of it, and hir winges spread a broad, whereon the monkes did lay theire bookes when they sung theire legends at mattins or at other times of service." Rites of the church of Durham, p. 11.

In some churches there were two flights of steps, the one used by the reader of the epistle, the other by the reader of the gospel. The 33rd canon of the council of Trullo cited by Bona, and by Gerbert, tom. i. 321, &c., condemns a custom which at one time was again prevailing of laymen taking upon them the office of reader and ascending the pulpit. The Ethiopic missal directs the epistle to be read with a loud voice: "Postea magna voce dicit epistolam;" edit. 1550, sign. G. 3.

Lyndwood agrees with this: "Corporalia non debent fieri ex serico, sed solum ex panno lineo puro terreno ab episcopo consecrato. Nec debet confici neque benedici corporale de panno misso in confectione farinæ, vel alterius rei ad hoc, quod stet rigidum super calicem. . . . Among the churchwardens' accounts of the parish of St. Michael, York, in the year 1521 is an item, "Pd for a pair of mosfits for to wase the corporase." Nichols, p. 309. The editor in a note supposes these mosfits to be mosticks, which are said in the dictionaries to be the steadying-rods used by painters; and that such sticks or rods were used in the old fashion of washing by what was called bucking, and in the bucking tub. As the charge occurs amongst parish accounts we may conclude that, whatever the mosfits mean, special attention was paid at that time to the washing of the corporals.

⁵² (Graduale. Sar. &c.) This was a verse or response which varied with the day, and was so called not, as some have supposed, from the steps of the altar but of the pulpit or ambo upon which it was sung. Cassander, from an old exposition of an ordo Romanus, has put this beyond a doubt: "Responsorium, quod ad missam dicitur, pro distinctione aliorum graduale vocatur, quia hoc psallitur in gradibus, cætera vero ubicunque voluerit clerus." Opera, p. 44. Durand says: "Dicitur graduale, vel gradale, a gradibus scilicet humilitatis. Significans ascensus nostros a virtute in virtutem . . . pertinet ad opera activæ vitæ, ut notetur nos operibus respondere eis quæ in lectione audivimus: scilicet prædicationem." Lib. iv. cap. 19. Some authors suppose (see Cavalierus, tom. v. cap. x. 13, and Bellarmine, Controv. lib. vj. 70) that the gradual, whose first author is said to have been pope Celestine, was appointed "ne illud tempus, quo diaconus ab altari recedens, et in suggestum ascendens in silentio cla-beretur." This seems a very likely origin, and serves also to account for its name.

⁵⁴ (Sequentia. Sar.) Ducange says, "Canticum exultationis, quæ et Prosa dicitur:" and there seems to be no doubt that, at least anciently, these terms were applied to the same thing. Compare Bona, tom. iii. p. 141, and Georgius, Lit. Rom. pontif. tom. 2. ccvij. They, as also the tropes, were introduced about the tenth century, and in many churches vast numbers were used, so that in some liturgies even every day had its proper sequence. It does not appear that they were in such excess at any time in the church of England. The most common opinion as to their author or rather first introducer of them (for as time went on they had many authors) is, that the earliest was composed by Notker abbot of St. Gall in the diocese of Constance, about A.D. 900. There have not been wanting writers who have not hesitated, though without a shadow of authority, to attribute to them so great an antiquity as the age of Gelasius and St. Gregory. At the revision of the Roman liturgy in the sixteenth century all the sequences were removed, except four: three are, Victimæ paschali, at easter; Veni sancte Spiritus, at whitsuntide: and Lauda Sion salvatorem, upon Corpus Christi day. The fourth which was retained is the very famous Dies iræ, dies illa, in the missa defunctorum. Strictly speaking this last is improperly called a sequence; because in the office for the dead there ought not to be, neither is there, any hymn peculiarly of joy. It may very rightly be called a Prose, a name given as I have said to the sequences, because though written in a species of rhythm they are not limited by any of the common rules of metre. I may add, these sequences are said to have been so called because they followed the epistle. I must again refer the reader to the dissertation on service books, Monumenta rit. vol. i: and if he wishes to examine the subject fully, he will find an admirable treatise upon it in Georgius, tom. 2. ccv, &c.

⁵⁵ (Tractus. Ebor.) "Cantus ecclesiastici species." Durand says, "Dicitur tractus a trahendo: quia tractim et cum asperitate vocum, et prolixitate verborum canitur." Lib. iv. cap. 21. It was opposed to the Alleluia: the one being for the seasons of joy and triumph, the other of sorrow and abasement. Almost all the ritualists agree with Durand and the earlier writers from whom he derived his authorities, as to the origin of the name: Merati adds in his note to Gavantus: "vere dicitur a trahendo: quia revera continuata serie modulationis unius cantoris non interrupta responsionibus aliorum intercinentium peragebatur. Hoc autem est discrimen inter responsorium et tractum, quod primo chorus respondet, tractui vero nemo. Tractus totus dicebatur ab uno solo cantore, qui erat diversus ab illo, qui cantabat graduale, sive responsorium." Tom. i. p. 93.

The custom of saying some response, either gradual or tract or sequence, after the epistle seems to be as old at least as the time of St. Augustine. He says, "Apostolum audivimus, psalmum audivimus, evangelium audivimus." Serm. 8. But it would appear that then an entire psalm was sung, a remnant of which ancient practice was preserved in the Salisbury, York, Hereford, and Bangor missals, upon the first sunday in Lent and on Passion sunday. Probably the new mode of a verse or two only became general about the end of the fifth century: because Leo the great speaks of the whole psalm (A.D. 450), but in the sacramentary of St. Gregory (A.D. 600) the shorter gradual or response is found. See Romsée, Opera, tom. iv. p. 121.

⁵⁶ (Tropus. Ebor.) "Est quidam versiculus, qui præcipuis festivitatis cantatur; et continet tria, videlicet antiphonam, versum, et gloriam. Ita Durandus, Ration. lib. iv. c. 5, qui hæc subdit lib. vi. c. 114. Hi autem versus tropi vocantur, quasi laudes ad antiphonas convertibiles: Τρόπος enim Græce, conversio dicitur Latine." Ducange, Gloss. It is not easy to say what is meant by the use of the term trope in this place; possibly the sequence is intended, for the true tropi were attached to the introit. Even so used they were of late introduction, and did not obtain universal acceptance. No example of one has occurred before the eleventh century. Certainly the monastic uses were more full of them than the diocesan; and we find prayers with such interpolations in some of their missals: in one sense the addition to the Gloria in excelsis (of which I have already spoken) may be called a trope. In such a way, the trope here spoken of may be an addition to the tract or sequence. See more upon this in the dissertation upon service books, verb. Troparium, Monumenta ritualia, vol. i.

Apud Græcos etiamnum mos viget, ut evangelium a lectoribus publice legatur, uti refert Smithius in epistola de præsentī ecclesiæ Græcæ statu. pag. 155." Cavalieri, Opera, tom. v. p. 30. An interesting enquiry is here opened which this is not the place to pursue, nor can I afford space. One thing seems certain: that the gospel was read only by deacons long before the reading of the epistle was in like manner removed from the office of the lector: of which latter duty as attached to the subdeacon we find no trace earlier than about the seventh century.

It was to meet this that an alteration was made in the sixteenth century in the form of ordination of subdeacons, and the following words were added: "Accipe librum epistolarum, et habe potestatem legendi eas in ecclesia sancta Dei." Amalarius in the ninth century expresses his wonder at the new practice which was then gaining ground: "ut subdiaconus frequentissime legat lectionem ad missam, cum hoc non reperiatur ex ministerio sibi dato in consecratione commissum, neque ex nomine suo." Lib. 2. cap. xj. Micrologus speaks much in the same way. And even Durand in the thirteenth century enquires, "Quare subdiaconus legit lectionem ad missam, cum non reperiatur hoc sibi competere, vel ex eo nomine, vel ex ministerio sibi concesso?" Lib. ii. cap. 8.

The canons and the pastoral epistle of archbishop Ælfric supply sufficient information as to the practice of the Anglo-saxon church in his time. In the first of these, can. 10, he lays down that "seven degrees are established in the Church: one is ostiarius, the second is lector, the third exorcista, the fourth acoluthus, the fifth subdiaconus, the sixth diaconus, the seventh presbyter." In the succeeding canons he explains the offices proper to each: "12. Lector is the reader, who reads in God's church, and is ordained for the purpose of preaching of God's word. 15. Subdiaconus is truly underdeacon, who bears forth the vessels to the deacon, and humbly ministers under the deacon at the holy altar, with the housel vessels. 16. Diaconus is the minister who ministers to the mass-priest, and sets the offerings upon the altar, and also reads the gospels at God's ministries." Thorpe, Ancient laws and institutes, vol. ii. p. 349. The pastoral epistle is to the same purpose, p. 379, and clearly attaches the reading to the lector, and not to the subdeacon.

And not only the canons and epistle of Ælfric but other very ancient writers attribute the gospel-lection solely to the deacon. Isidore in his second book of Divine offices "inter officia diaconi" includes "evangelizare." Cap. 8. But, in short, as in another place I have spoken, Monumenta rit. vol. i, upon the great reverence with which our fathers treated the Book of the gospels (whether the entire gospels or the selections to be read in the liturgy), the Evangelisterium, lavishing upon it all kinds of outward ornament and inside decorations of the pencil, so also the practice began from the same feelings of pious gratitude and devotion, that the reading of the gospel should be committed to none of less degree and order in the Church than deacons: "diaconis tantum, qui ad sacerdotalem dignitatem proxime accedunt." During the reading the laity showed also greater signs of reverence. Staffs were laid aside: Amalarius, lib. iii. 18; Gemma animæ, lib. i. 24; Durand, lib. iv. 24, &c. All rose, Constit. apostol. lib. ii. cap. 57: and in some churches listened to it half-kneeling in a stooping posture.

How high was the estimation in which the gospels were held in the middle ages is proved most clearly by the fact that some writers in the eighth century did not hesitate to say that, in a remote sense, the gospel is the Body of Christ. "Et corpus Christi quod manducatur non solum panis et vini, quod super altare offertur, sed et ipsum evangelium Christi est; et cum evangelium legimus et intelligimus, filii in circuitu mensæ in una conlatione sedemus, et panem nostrum manducamus." Etherius, lib. i. de Incarnat.

The laying aside of staffs alluded to just above was not a very early practice: but was introduced about the eighth century (for Amalarius speaks of it) and lasted through the next three or four. It was then the custom for the people to stand during the whole service and, it being long, they rested themselves on their staffs. Their use ceased altogether in the western church when seats and settles were introduced. See Sala's note to Bona, tom. iii. p. 153. We learn from St. Chrysostom, hom. 63, that in the Greek church during the reading of the gospel the emperor laid aside his crown.

I must add to this note an extract from a very rare book, written by one as it was then called "of the new learning," about the year 1529: the full title is, "A worke entytled of the olde god and the newe, of the olde faythe and the newe, of the olde doctryne and the newe, or orygynall begynnynge of Idolatrye." The author is describing some of the ceremonies of the mass. "But what shall I saye of the gospell, when it is song? Oh, how goodly ceremonies are then done.—

M. 4. This is an important little book so far as it illustrates the then existing practice; and is written in a lively satirical style, but with very much of that indecent and blasphemous ribaldry which characterises so many of the books of the reformers at that time. The author was, it seems from his own account, a chaplain or minor-canon of some cathedral, and disappointed at not having obtained better preferment: which accounts for much of his virulence against others of higher dignity. The “Old god and the newe” was strictly prohibited by a royal proclamation in the year 1530: see Wilkins, Concilia, vol. iii. p. 737. I have quoted the above from a copy in my possession.

⁵⁸ This prayer, introduced probably about the eleventh century, was not adopted in the English uses.

⁵⁹ (Jube domne benedicere.) This, says Le Brun, was a manner of address formerly much in use, as being a mark of humiliation and respect. So, anciently among the Greeks the deacon, when he warned the faithful who were assembled in their solemn service either to rise or sit, did not say Rise or Sit, but merely "Jubete," as if it were, command yourselves to do so and so.

The word domne is a contraction from dominus. The latter was appropriated in its strict use to the Deity alone; and domnus or domna was a title of great respect in the middle ages, and applied only to eminent dead saints or living people who occupied important offices in the church; as, for example, the officiating priest during the celebration of the eucharist. See also Ducange upon the word.

Upon this request and the reply, Peter Damian has well observed: "Lecturus magnæ humilitatis gratia, non a sacerdote, sed ab eo, cui sacerdos jusserit, se postulat benedici dicens: Jube domne benedicere. Sacerdos autem, ut tantæ humilitati vicem reddat, non subjecto cuiquam benedicendi delegat officium, nec per semetipsum benedictionem dare præsumit: sed potius, ut a Deo, qui est super omnia benedictus, prærogetur, exposcit." De Dominus vobiscum, cap. ii.

When the pope officiates at matins on the day of the Nativity he does not say Domne before the ninth lection which he then reads, but Jube Domine benedicere; for he is supposed to be addressing not man, but God Himself: and no response is made; for the greater cannot be blessed by the less. The choir answers simply "Amen." Some bishops (and the object of this rule is not easy to understand) in their own churches at matins were addressed by an inferior, "Jube domne benedicere," to which they made the usual reply and benediction, and themselves read the appointed lection. The Cærimoniale episc. now orders the same rite to be observed by all bishops as by the pope; unless an archbishop or one of higher rank be present: "Si vero adesset aliquis prælatus major se," &c. ⁶³ There is no little difference in the old books as to the place where and the quarter towards which the gospel should be read. When as was very anciently the custom the men and the women were divided, it would seem that the gospel was always read towards the south side, where the men sat. ment: and an old ordo Romanus takes it for granted that on entering a church one would have the men upon the right hand or south side, and the women on the north. See also Amalarius, Ecloga, cap. xiiij, printed in Georgius, appendix, tom. iii. p. 350: "Diaconus vero stat versus ad meridiem, ad quam partem viri solent confluere."

"Antequam tamen ulterius progrediamur, juvat in transcurso ob oculos ponere formam veterum basilicarum. Pleræque orienti, quædam occidenti obversæ erant. Navis columnis fulta, in qua viri ad austrum, mulieres ad septemtrionem residebant. Sequebatur schola cantorum, nobis chorus appellatus. Ambon sive lectorium unum aut alterum adjunctum erat: quatuor aut quinque hinc inde gradus duplices habens pro ascensu et descensu. Ex quo videas, longe disparem fuisse formam amborum a forma odeorum nostrorum, quorum situs etiam diversus: cum ambones illi plurimum ad septemtrionem positi essent, odea vero nostra ea parte, quæ chorus a navi disternat." Mabillon, Mus. Ital. tom. 2. p. xx.

The original reason why the men were addressed especially appears natural enough; viz. that they are the chief objects of the Church's teaching in her public offices, and from them the women are to learn at home; as St. Paul admonishes. Other customs gradually crept in, and a mystical reason was given why the gospel should be read towards the north: as we have seen (note 47) was the custom of the Church of Hereford: "ut per Dei verbum aquilonis, hoc est, dæmonis, pravi noxiique halitus disjiciantur." Le Brun, i. III. And the Gemma animæ, cap. xvj: "Nunc autem secundum inolitum morem se (diaconus) ad aquilonem vertit, ubi feminæ stant, quæ carnales significant, quia evangelium carnales a spiritualibus vocat. Per aquilonem quoque diabolus designatur, qui per evangelium impugnatur. Per aquilonem etiam infidelis populus denotatur, cui evangelium prædicatur ut ad Christum convertatur." This last reason is taken from a very old sacramentary which says: "Diaconus dum legit, sistat versus ad aquilonem, quia frigidis in fide prædicatur evangelium." Sala, notes to Bona, tom. iii. p. 153: but he does not say what book: "ex quodam libro sacramentorum;" quoting Martene, Anecd. tom. v. 1587.

I shall only further make an extract from the will of Maud, lady Mauley, dated in 1438: "My body to be buried in the church . . . on the south side of the altar, where the gospels are usually read." Testamenta vetusta, p. 235.

⁶⁴ (Dominis vobiscum.) It is strange that the York use takes no notice of this salutation: nor is it easy to suggest why it was omitted, being a custom so general throughout the Church. Alcuin speaks of it: "Salutat et populum, dicens: Dominus vobiscum: quatenus corda illorum a mundanis cogitationibus Dominus emundet, et ad suscipienda verba salutifera aperire dignetur." De div. off. bibl. patr. auct. i. p. 280. ⁶⁷ (Finito evangelio. Sar.) The usual custom was to preach the sermon, if there should be any, at this part of the service; but there was no strict rule observed in all churches. Sometimes the sermon was preached after the creed; and sometimes after the offertory: as in 1476 on a special occasion at Winchester in honour of the relics of St. Swithun: "antistes Wintoniensis missam celebrabat. Lecto evangelio et offertorio finito, episcopus Cicestrensis sermonem habuit ad populum in vulgari." Concil. tom. 3. p. 611. Or again, on the authority of Chaucer, we might suppose that a break in the service at the offertory was by no means unusual. Speaking of the Pardoner, he says:—

"He was in chirche a noble ecclesiast,

Very anciently more than one sermon was delivered: the priests first, each in order, gave a short exhortation, and if he were present the bishop last. Apost. const. lib. ii. c. 58. In the next chapter of the same book particular directions are given that priests coming from another parish should be pressed to preach, "for a stranger's words are always acceptable and very useful, according to that in St. Matt., no prophet is without honour save in his own country."

"Deinde episcopus sermonem ad populum facit." Gemma animæ, cap. 25. This custom of preaching during the liturgy has been established and never omitted during the whole existence of the Christian Church. From the time of Justin Martyr we can trace a multitude of authorities, down to our own day. It has always moreover been held to be one of the peculiar duties of the bishops of the Church: as St. Paul exhorted Timothy that he should "preach the word; instant in season and out of season."

We find in the earliest records which remain of the English Church evidence of the anxiety which was always felt to enforce this great duty of preaching. The sixth of the excerpts of Egbert orders every priest diligently to instruct his people: the third explains the time when this is to be done: "Ut omnibus festis et diebus dominicis unusquisque sacerdos evangelium Christi prædicet populo." Thorpe, vol. ii. p. 98. Passing over some hundred years, we have the following among the canons of Ælfric: "The mass-priest shall on

Let the teacher warn against that which the prophet says : canes muti non possunt latrare. We ought to bark and preach to the laymen, lest, for want of teaching, they should perish." Thorpe, p. 352. Once more, for there would be no end of accumulating directions of this sort during succeeding ages : "The mass-priest shall rightly preach the true faith to men, and recite sermons to them ; and visit sick men," &c. Ælfric's Pastoral epistle, p. 385. Stillingfleet speaking of the frequency of preaching in the church of England before the reformation has made the strangest statements, and drawn (against the direct evidence of his own authorities) the most outrageous conclusions. The well-known passage from Sozomen (on which he and other protestant controversialists have relied) does not refer to preaching, generally, at Rome—for it is the city of Rome alone to which the historian alludes—but to the introduction of a sermon always at mass ; which is not distinctly ordered in the earliest sacramentaries. *Orig. After the gospel indulgences were proclaimed, and excommunications, and banns of marriage: in some churches other solemnities, such as the reconciling and readmitting of penitents. Vide Martene, de ant. ritibus ecc. lib. i. cap. 4. Legates also explained the object of their legation. With the conclusion of the sermon the missa catechumenorum also ended: and they, with the unreconciled and unbelievers, were dismissed and the doors shut, and persons stationed there to prevent any from coming in. St. Augustine says, serm. 49, "Ecce post sermonem fit missa catechumenis, manebunt fideles." Much information upon all this portion of the liturgy in the earliest ages may be found in Bingham's Christian antiquities; on later practice, in Bauldryus, Manualis sacr. cœrim. cap. x.

⁷⁵ (Offertorium.) The verse is so called which was sung just before the oblation of the elements by the priest. Anciently at this time the people made their offerings. The custom is still observed in all parochial masses in Roman catholic churches. Another name, but not a common one, was "Sacrificium." Very much information (I need scarcely remind the reader) respecting the ancient oblations of the people, the manner of offering, the quality, the restrictions, &c., is to be found in the writers both ancient and modern who have treated on the subject. Indeed so much, that in the compass of a note I am scarcely warranted in entering at all upon it; but I must extract a short passage from Walafrid Strabo: "Offertorium, quod inter offerendum cantatur, quamvis a prioris populi consuetudine in usum Christianorum venisse

Sed sicut supradictum est, diversis modis, et partibus per tempora decus processit ecclesiæ, et usque in finem augeri non desinet." De reb. eccles. c. 22. A remark to the same effect occurs in Radulp. Tungr. de canon. observ. prop. xxiiij, and I shall add that the custom of singing at this time is as old as the age of St. Augustine, who speaks of it in his Retract. lib. 2. c. xj.

It is not easy to say whether the most ancient practice was for the people to approach the altar ; probably not : certainly not in the Greek Church : and there are various canons of the western which forbid women, after permission was given to men. Theodulph Aurelian, Capitular. cap. 6. And the sixth of the Anglo-saxon ecclesiastical institutes is directed to this point : "We also command that at those hours in which the priest sings the mass no woman approach near the altar, but let them stand in their places, and the mass-priest will there receive from them the offering which they desire to offer to God. Women should bear in mind their infirmities and the tenderness of their sex, and therefore they shall dread to touch any of the holy things belonging to the services of the church." Thorpe, Ancient laws and institutes, vol. ii. 407.

The rule in the primitive ages was that nothing should be offered but what was proper also to be consumed at the altar, or at least in the service of the Church : and to this the apostolical canon is directed, can. 3. Afterwards this was further limited to bread and wine and water, only, by the people: and all else when offered was not looked upon as for the sacrifice, but in a lower respect: as first-fruits and pious gifts for the use of the Church and her ministers.

An old ordo Romanus cited by Bona, lib. 2. cap. ix. § 1, thus describes the manner of offering: "Cantores cantant offertorium cum versibus, et populus dat oblationes suas, id est panem et vinum, et offerunt cum fanonibus candidis, primo masculi, deinde fœminæ. Novissime vero sacerdotes et diaconi offerunt, sed solum panem." These fanones as Cassander explains were napkins. The offertorium cum versibus relates to a period when not only verses but even whole psalms were added to the offertory proper; and sometimes, for the collecting took much time, these were sung and repeated again and again.

It is not known when the old custom of offering bread and wine ceased: the author of the Gemma animæ is a witness that money was given instead in his day, the eleventh century:

Et postea sumat patenam cum hostia et ponat super calicem, et tenens calicem and he states a reason for the change, "quia populo non communicante non erat necesse panem tam magnum fieri, statutum est, eum in modum denarii formari; et ut populus pro oblatione farinæ denarios offerret." Cap. 58. He adds: "qui tamen denarii in usum pauperum qui membra sunt Christi cederent, vel in aliquid quod ad hoc sacrificium pertinet."

This part of the liturgy is sometimes called the "Missa omnium offerentium." Pinius, de lit. ant. Hisp. p. 91.

⁷⁶ This is the same as that which is called "sacrificium" in the Sarum and Bangor rubrics, and in its own succeeding prayer "Acceptum sit:" doubtless, as being that which is about to be consecrated, and offered to the Almighty Father as the Body of his Son. Speaking of this oblation, Amalarius says: "facit eam transire per suam secretam orationem ad nomen hostiæ, sive muneris, donive, vel sacrificii, seu oblationis." Præf. 2. de eccles. off.

who stood round God's altar. He gave it, not at all because of bodily defilement; no; for we did not set out for the church with defiled bodies. But this washing of hands is a symbol that ye ought to be pure from all sinful and unlawful deeds: for since the hands are a symbol of action, by washing them we represent the purity and blamelessness of our conduct. Hast thou not heard the blessed David opening this mystery, and saying, I will wash my hands in innocency, and so will I compass thine altar, O Lord? The washing therefore of hands is a symbol of immunity from sin." Catechetical lect. Oxf. trans. p. 273.

So also we are told in the Apostolical const. b. viii. c. 11. The water which at this time is poured upon the priest's hands "is a sign of the purity which befits a soul consecrated to God."

Diaconus interim ipsum altare in sinistro cornu thurificabit et reliquias more solito in circuitu. Ablutis manibus sacerdos revertat se ad altare ad divinum servitium exequendum: diaconus et subdiaconus suis gradibus supradicto modo se teneant. Deinde sacerdos stans ante altare inclinatum capite et corpore, junctis manibus dicat:

The author writes as if the words were "in honorem;" but the right reading is, as in the text above, "in honore." It must be remembered that occasionally mediæval writers used with the same meaning "in honore" and "in honorem."

A somewhat similar prayer is in some of the Greek liturgies, and Sala in his additions to cardinal Bona's work says that it occurs "iisdem fere terminis" in the Ambrosian missal. He does not quote the prayer, and his remark is not strictly

After a disquisition upon the benefit which can be procured by purchasing of masses, he concludes : "et licet sacerdos etiam pro absentibus orare et sacrificium offerre queat, nihilominus indubitatum est : et constat ex precibus, quæ tempore sacrificii dicuntur, missam specialiter pro circumstantibus, sive præsentibus offerri : ipsosque fideles præsentibus una cum sacerdote offerre ; adeo ut ipse sacerdos conversus ad populum dicat : 'Orate fratres : ut meum,' &c. The Hereford missal does not supply the answer which the people were to make in obedience to the "orate" of the priest: but we can scarcely suppose that no response was looked for. Possibly, though not likely, the response was left to their own devotion, as might be recommended in the occasional prayers added to the primers or horæ of the diocese. ⁹⁶ These secrets varied with the day, as did the collects or gradual, &c. : and were sometimes one only, sometimes more. In ancient MSS. we commonly find these prayers called "super oblata," and although Amalarius, lib. 3. cap. 20, with others of no less authority, decides that the name secreta was given because they were said secreto, yet it is not improbable that the name arose "a secretionem donorum et oblationum." These prayers are entitled in the Sarum, York, and the other English missals, sometimes secretum, but the usual way of speaking of them is the "secretæ," i.e. orationes.

³ (Præfationes.) So called, as being an introduction to the Canon or most solemn part of the service. In the Greek church only one preface is used: anciently in the west there was a greater number than at present: about the twelfth century they were reduced to ten. Pope Pelagius (in a letter to the bishops of Gaul, quoted by almost all the ritualists) enumerates nine prefaces only, proper to certain days. These are mentioned in the Leofric missal, preserved in the Bodleian

To these a tenth was afterwards added, in honour of the blessed Virgin, which is mentioned as to be used also in the English church, by the fourteenth canon of the synod of Westminster, A.D. 1175; quoting, but not as in the Leofric MS., the epistle of Pelagius. This (like the canon mentioned

As to the epistle of Pelagius, just cited, I must observe that cardinal Bona doubts its authenticity: his observations should be consulted; lib. ii. cap. 10. And the very learned Stephen Baluze agrees with Bona: to which we must add that the epistle is rejected by Labbe and Cossart, Conc. tom. v. p. 931. In some of the most ancient manuscripts which are extant (for example, the famous one formerly queen Christina's of Sweden and now in the Vatican) the preface is called Immolatio, and sometimes Contestatio missæ because, says Bona, "in ea sacerdos audita voce populi, vel cleri, sive ministri asserentis dignum et justum esse Deo gratias agere, contestatur veram esse hanc populi assertionem: tum solemnī gratiarum actione se et fideles disponit ad tremenda mysteria, quibus Christi corpus immolatur." It is styled in the Mozarabic missal Inlatio; of which there appears to be no satisfactory interpretation.

The preface is of such great antiquity, occurring in the liturgy of St. James, and being spoken of by St. Cyprian, St. Cyril, and other fathers as of common use in their time, that we cannot attribute its introduction to any age later than the apostolic.

The twenty-fifth of the canons made at Westminster or Canterbury in 1173 orders, "Non dicantur præfationes præter ea, quæ statuta sunt." Concil. tom. i. p. 475.

⁴ There is no direction here; probably the old custom of the church of England was not to turn at this "Dominus vobiscum," as at other such salutations, toward the people but continue still to face the altar. I mention it on account of the reason having by some been referred to the very ancient practice of the Greek churches of shutting in the sanctuary at this time, and enclosing the priest within the curtains and a veil: which, of course, would so far account for it, as he and the people could not for a time see one another. Vide Cavalieri, Opera, tom. v. p. 65, and Le Brun, tom. i. p. 186. But compare also Amalarius, lib. iii. cap. 9, who gives other reasons for the exception in this case.

Micrologus also observes, cap. xj: "presbyter post finitam secretam orditur præfationem in canonem, in qua supernorum civium ordines merito connumerantur, quia iisdem mysteriis, quæ ibi conficiuntur, juxta attestationem sanctorum patrum, interesse creduntur, unde et angelicum trisagium subjungitur."

To ask by whom the canon of the mass was drawn up, or who may rightly be called the author of it, is an idle enquiry. Subject to some few verbal variations, the canon has remained the same from the end of the sixth century to the present time. Very probably it was the same up to the third century, with the exception of slight additions made from time to time. We shall never probably know the exact form and words of the Roman liturgy, during the first three hundred years of the Christian æra. But we may be sure that in the spirit of its arrangement and in the character and general language of its prayers and ceremonies the canon of the mass up to the apostolic age did not differ from the canon as it was observed for nearly a thousand years in the church of England before the reformation, and as it still is in the Roman catholic church throughout the world. We may use the words of Walafrid Strabo who wrote in the ninth century: "Ipsam actionem, qua conficitur sacrosanctum corporis et sanguinis Dominici mysterium (quam quoque Romani canonem, ut in pontificalibus sæpius invenitur, appellant) quis primus ordinaverit, nobis ignotum est. Auctam tamen fuisse, non semel sed sæpius, ex partibus additis intelligimus." De rebus ecc. cap. 22. Nor need we hesitate to accept the statement of pope Vigilius, who writes of the liturgy in his epistle to Eucherius, "ex apostolica traditione suscepimus;" or of a pope earlier even than Vigilius, "quis enim nesciat aut non advertat id, quod a principe apostolorum Petro Romanæ ecclesiæ traditum est, ac usque nunc custoditur, ab omnibus debere servari?" Innocent. epist. ad Decentium.

Sacerdos extendens et jungens manus, elevans ad cœlum oculos, et statim demittens, profunde inclinat⁹ ante altare, manibus super eo posit⁹, dicit:

The whole canon of the mass was sometimes called Secretum: as, for example, in the third decree of the synod of York, 1195, which respects the correctness of the manuscripts used in the public services and begins: "Quia secretum missæ frequenter invenitur aut scriptorum falsitate, aut librorum vetustate corruptum, ita ut legi distincte non possit," &c. Wilkins, Conc. i. 501.

The title Canon as applied to this part of the service is as old certainly as at least the time of Gregory the great; who speaks of himself having directed the Lord's prayer to be said "mox post canonem." Mabillon, however, says that the term cannot be traced further back than the time of that pope: "precem illam canonem primus, aut inter primos, absolute vocat Gregorius M." Mus. Ital. 2. p. xlvij. Strictly the canon ends before the Lord's prayer; and in many manuscripts a different style of writing then begins again.

But it may not be improper to mention some other titles which have been given to this portion of the liturgy. "*Prece*m vocat Innocentius I. in epist. ad Decentium: et Vigiliis p. Profuturum, canonicæ precis textum." Gerbert, tom. i. p. 122. Again, the same author, p. 446, quoting Amalarius: "ab illo loco, ubi secretam dicit episcopus usque ad AGNUS DEI, totum illud vocat Augustinus Orationes." And Gavantus has collected several others. Regula ecclesiastica, from St. Ambrose. Legitimum, Optatus. Secretum, St. Basil. Ordo precum, Isidore. Actio and Regula, by Walafrid Strabo. (Thesaurus sacr. rit., tom. i. 105.)

To these I must not omit to add Lyndwood's explanation: "Licet quidam simplices sacerdotes intelligant canonem, quidquid est in secreto missæ: et stricte intelligendo canonem, puto quod Hostiensis dicit verum, est namque canon idem quod regula. Missa vero proprie dicitur eucharistiæ consecratio. Alia autem omnia, quæ vel sacerdos dicit vel chorus canit, gratiarum actiones sunt, vel certe obsecrationes. Unde canon missæ vere dicitur regula illa, per quam eucharistia consecratur: large tamen intelligendo canonem missæ juxta communem intellectum simplicium sacerdotum, denotat totum secretum missæ post præfationem." Lib. i. tit. 10, Ut archidiaconi, verb. Canon.

² (Functis manibus.) In this the English uses agree, differing from what has been the rule of the Roman missal "manibus extensis." It would seem however that very anciently this last was the custom in some parts at least of this country also. For we read of St. Dunstan: "eo quippe inter sacrosancta missarum solemnia sacras manus extendente, et Deum Patrem omnipotentem, ut 'ecclesiam suam catholicam pacificare, custodire,' &c. interpellante, nivea columba de cœlo descendit." Vita S. Dunstani, cap. xxxij.

Micrologus says: "Notandum autem, per totum canonem Dominicæ passionis commemorationem potissimum actitari,

So also Radulph. Tungr. prop. 23. But the later ritualists take a different view.

³ There is no doubt that for many centuries before the reformation the Church of England, according to her different uses, yet agreed in all of them with the rest of the western Church in this point: that the whole of the canon, from the Te igitur to the per omnia sæcula sæculorum, was said secreto, or submissa voce. It is a stupid error to suppose that by secreto is meant no utterance at all, or even what is commonly called mumbling: for there are many orders of the English Church (which I shall have occasion to cite presently) which prove that a distinct pronunciation was required of every word no less than in those parts of the liturgy which were repeated aloud. The present Rubricæ generales prefixed to the Roman missal explain well this point: "Quæ vero secreta dicenda sunt, ita pronuntiet, ut et ipse se audiat, et a circumstantibus non audiat." Tit. xvi. 2.

So the provincial constitution of Walter Reynold, in 1322: "Verba canonis, in his præsertim quæ ad sanctum sacramentum pertinent, plene, integre, et cum summa animi devotione proferantur. Non tamen sit ita morosus sacerdos in præmissis, quod fastidium ingerat auditoribus, et officium suum privet devotionis pinguedine: quia muscæ morientes perdunt suavitatem unguenti, id est, pinguedinem devotionis." Concil. tom. 2. p. 513. Lyndwood glosses thus: "*Devotione. Ut scilicet mentis intentio firmiter applicetur ad Deum, et ad pronunciationem verborum. Intentio namque semper est necessaria, vel specialis, vel generalis: et non solum requiritur intentio consecrantis, sed etiam intentio istud sacramentum instituentis. Morosus, i.e. tardans. animi devotione, melior sit quam oratio prolixa cum anxietate cordis." Lib. 3. tit. 23, Linteamina.

But the subject of chief importance, upon which one or two brief remarks are necessary, is as to the time when this practice began of repeating the canon so that no one but the officiating priest might hear what was said. There seems to be no question that in the primitive ages the faithful heard the whole and answered at the end, Amen. Very probably there was a variety of tone; but not to such an extent that the priest was inaudible. Cardinal Bona is decisive upon this: speaking of the use of the Greek Church, that its liturgy is said aloud, he adds: "eundem morem servabat olim ecclesia occidentalis, omnes enim audiebant sanctissima et efficacissima verba, quibus Christi corpus conficitur." And he further gives it as his opinion that no change took place in this respect until the tenth century.

In the twelfth century, the author of the Gemma animæ not only speaks of secret utterance as then the usual practice but gives three reasons for it: "Una est, quia cum Deo loquimur, cui non ore sed corde clamare præcipimur. Secunda est, ne populus tam prolixa declamatione attædiatus abscedat, vel sacerdos tam longo clamore voce deficiat. Tertia est, ne tam sancta verba tanti mysterii vilescant, dum ea vulgus per quotidianum usum in inconvenientibus locis dicat." Cap. 103. If these were the reasons which led to so great a departure from primitive use they can scarcely be regarded as sufficient. Amalarius offers some of greater weight: "non est necessaria vox reboans" he says, de off. eccles. lib. 3. cap. 20: and again, "ut impudentis est clamoribus strepere, ita contra congruit verecundo, modestis precibus orare." Cap. 23. He wrote before the tenth century, and it is not certain that he intends more than a proper modulation and lowering of the voice.

Modern ritualists and theologians do not agree why the canon should be said secreto. Some say that the mystery should be concealed; some, that greater reverence is to be the effect of it; some, that the canon and especially the verba consecrationis should not be made common. As to this last it can have little if any weight, though most relied on : because not only are there and always have been an infinity of books which the laity may use, but parish priests are strictly enjoined to make known to their people the meaning and complete knowledge of this service, by catechisms and sermons, &c. The words of a learned writer on the subject are, "ut perfectam populo christiano tradant hujus mysterii notitiam." Romsée, Opera, tom. iv. p. 200. And the Catechismus ad parochos declares that all those points "a pastori-bus diligentissime exponenda erunt, quæ ejus majestatem magis illustrare posse videantur." Edit. Aldus, 1566, p. 130. Of which teaching, as there exemplified, the verba consecrationis form the chief part. The council of Trent decrees : "Si quis dixerit ecclesiæ Romanæ ritum, quo submissa voce pars canonis, et verba consecrationis proferuntur, damnandum esse ; . . . anathema sit." Sess. 22. can. ix.

Against Bona and the other great writers who agree with him Le Brun wrote a long dissertation, in which he collected all the authorities which in any way seem to prove the greater antiquity of saying the canon in an audible voice. It is to be found at the end of the fourth volume of his works.

I shall extract some constitutions of the English Church which are directed to the saying of the canon : and shall leave to the judgment of the reader whether they decide clearly or not, at least the earlier of them, that the then custom in this country was that the priest should not be heard by the people. In one thing they are decisive enough ; that secreto did not exclude but rather directed, distinct pronunciation.

The first canon of the council of London, A. D. 1200, orders : "Cum in divinis officiis non sine periculo corporum et animarum erretur, salubri provisione concilii prospeximus, ut a quolibet sacerdote celebrante, verba canonis rotunde dicantur, nec ex festinatione contracta, nec ex diuturnitate nimis protracta." Wilkins, Concilia, tom. i. p. 505. In the year 1222 a council at Oxford decreed, canon vi: "Verba vero canonis, præsertim in consecratione corporis Christi plene et integre proferuntur." Wilkins, p. 586. One of the synodal constitutions of Gilbert bishop of Chichester, A.D. 1289, would be of importance if we could allow that the canon of the mass is included among the "divina officia" there meant. "Presbyteri sint seduli ad divina officia horis competentibus et statutis in suis ecclesiis celebranda, ne desidia vel negligentia argui sive puniri debeant a prælatis. Quæ autem legunt vel cantant, distincte proferant et aperte, non transiliendo, neque transcurrento, vel syncopando, sed cum debita reverentia, ut ad devotionem excitent mentes seu animos auditorum." Wilkins, tom. ii. p. 170. Once more, a provincial constitution of Walter Raynold archbishop of Canterbury, A.D. 1322: "Item verba canonis, præsertim in his, quæ ad substantialia sacramenti pertinent, plene, integre, et cum summa animi devotione proferantur." Wilkins, tom. ii. p. 513.

This last statute may be seen in the Provinciale, and Lyndwood gives the other constitution of archbishop Stephen Langton (A.D. 1222) in which is the same injunction: "Verba canonis . . . plene et integre proferantur." Lib. iii. tit. 23, Ad excitandos. His gloss is not of great importance to the present point, as he seems to limit the canon chiefly to the words of consecration: which is an improper interpretation of it. Plene, he says, means absque omissione. In the constitution of archbishop Raynold he refers "cum summa animi devotione" to the intention: "ut sc. mentis intentio firmiter applicetur ad Deum, et ad pronunciationem verborum. Intentio namque semper est necessaria, vel specialis, vel generalis."

I do not think it necessary to enter here upon the subject of Intention; by it (I would remind the reader) is meant the deliberate purpose or will to do or perform something, say, a sacrament; and it is commonly defined to be "volitio efficax finis, unde differt intentio a simplici volitione, seu complacentia finis, sive boni alicujus, quia simplex voluntas, seu complacentia respicit finem sine habitudine ad consecutionem. Intentio autem est volitio efficax tendens in finis consecutionem." Gavanti, Thesaurus, tom. i. p. 337. Upon the doctrine of the Roman catholic church in this matter; how intention may be either actual, or virtual, or habitual, or interpretative; how these differ from each other and affect the validity of a sacrament, the student will do well to consult Quarti in Rubr. Miss. part. 3. tit. vij; Benedict XIV, Opera, tom. ix. lib. iii. cap. 10; and Billuart, summa S. Thomæ, dissert. 3. vj, and 5. vij.

Returning to the order of secret recitation, the only exception at present to the universal rule is at ordinations of priests; when, as Benedict XIV says, "Ordinandi circa altare in genua provoluti disponuntur, et episcopus, quasi eos doceat missam celebrare, lente ac paullulum elata voce secretas profert, non eas ut populus audiat, sed ut sacerdotes novissime initiati cum eo possint eas recitare, et verba consecrationis uno eodemque tempore cum episcopo pronunciare; ad exemplum Christi qui voce, quæ ab apostolis audiri potuit, in ultima cæna panem et vinum consecravit, ut eos, quos tunc sacerdotio initiabat, doceret consecrandi modum legitimumque ritum ad consummationem usque sæculi duraturum." Opera, tom. ix. p. 248.

Upon the variety in using the sign of the cross here see St. Anselm, Opera, p. 139; ad Waleranni querelas, resp. cap. 2.

⁷ "Una cum beatissimo famulo tuo." Missal. Leofr. Probably the first canon of any council on this point is the fourth of the council of Vaisson, A.D. 529: "Nobis justum visum est, ut nomen domini papæ, quicumque apostolicæ sedi præfuerit, in nostris ecclesiis recitetur."

⁸ (Et rege nostro.) "Sacrificamus pro salute imperatoris," says Tertullian (ad Scapulam, c. 2) quoted by cardinal Bona; and we know from Eusebius how strictly this duty was fulfilled even in the case of the emperors Gallus, Valerian, and Gallienus; hist. eccl. lib. vii. cap. 1.

St. Paul in the second chapter of the first epistle to St. Timothy must have alluded to the eucharist and the prayers then to be offered up in behalf of kings. There can be no giving of thanks in its usual sense to God for His permitting of a persecuting king. But as Theophylact says "their safety is our peace." third chapter contains express directions that a certain prayer should be said daily for the king and his people: "Et præcipimus, ut in omni congregatione cantetur quotidie communiter pro rege et omni populo suo una missa ad matutinalem missam, quæ inscripta est, contra paganos," &c. Wilkins, Concilia, tom. i. 295. Here the word missa is used in a rather unusual sense, to signify a collect: but other examples may be found; especially the passage in the second council of Milevia, cap. xij: "Placuit ut preces, vel orationes, seu missæ, quæ probatæ fuerint in concilio ab omnibus celebrentur." The words "et fiant missæ" in the rule of St. Benedict must be taken to mean the same. Other significations of missa, such as for any ecclesiastical office, for lections, &c., before the term became limited to its more proper sense, may be seen in Duncange. And the same laws of king Ethelred afford another example of its use to signify collects; cap. ij: "Et super hoc cantet omnis presbyter xxx. missas, et omnis diaconus et clericus xxx. psalmos," &c.

In the printed missals is frequently inserted, sometimes before the canon, sometimes at the end of the volume, a mass or prayers to be said for the king. The reader will find in the Additional Note an example of these taken from an edition of the Salisbury missal, in 1516.

liturgies this prayer is entitled Oratio super diptycha. These diptychs were plates of wood or ivory, folded often latterly into three parts: upon the first of which were inscribed the names of great saints, apostles, and martyrs; upon the second, of those among the living who were illustrious for rank and station or had deserved well of the Church; and in the third were the names of those who had died in her communion. There was in some Churches a custom of reciting here also the names of those who had offered any oblation previously; but this could only have been some selected from the many and, I presume, not the same names always or the first and chief; but taken promiscuously from the whole number. For much information upon the diptychs, see Ducange, verb. Diptycha; Mabillon, de lit. Gall. lib. iii. 11; Bingham, Orig. eccles. vol. v, and a very learned treatise by Salig, de diptychis veterum, 4to. 1731.

¹² In this sentence the word vel must be taken not in a disjunctive but a conjunctive sense: as Menard shows in his notes to the sacramentary of St. Gregory. Compare with it the prayer above: "Orate, fratres, ut meum pariterque vestrum sacrificium," &c. There is a very famous place in Tertullian which bears upon the question involved in this passage: he is answering an objection, and whatever else his words may mean, they must be interpreted primarily not only with reference to that, but that the writer probably was not strict in weighing every word: "Vani erimus, si putaverimus quod sacerdotibus non liceat, laicis licere. Nonne et laici sacerdotes sumus? scriptum est, regnum quoque nos et sacerdotes Deo et Patri suo fecit. Differentiam inter ordinem et plebem constituit Ecclesiæ auctoritas, et honor per ordinis confessum sanctificatus adeo ubi ecclesiastici ordinis non est consensus, et offers et tinguis et sacerdos es tibi solus. . . . Igitur si habes jus sacerdotis in temetipso ubi necesse est, habeas oportet etiam disciplinam sacerdotis, ubi necesse sit habere jus sacerdotis." De exhort. cast., Opera, p. 522. Now, it might be sufficient to remember in reply to the argument which some would be inclined to draw from this what the fate of Tertullian was, and how unsound many of his peculiar opinions were. But, as Rigalt observes in his note, much more blame than is justly due has been thrown upon Tertullian in regard of this passage, from not properly considering in what sense that ancient author uses the terms oratio, sacrificium, oblatio, and sacramentum: which, he says, may be collected from the index to his works. Not only again does Tertullian use the word offerre and not consecrare, but he could not have been ignorant of the universal practice of his day to send portions of the blessed eucharist to the sick and to those in prison, of which there would have been no need if every layman was a priest in the more strict and true sense of the word.

The Church has always held that those who are present at the holy communion offer with the priest: and this, either because they do so by his ministry, or because they unite with him in the prayers which he puts up to the throne of grace, or because they actually do make offerings either necessary (as of old) to the due performance of the service itself, or as alms to be used for the benefit of the Church in any way. But she has never allowed that a lay-person can, in its proper sense, consecrate the elements, even in cases of necessity. The conduct of Frumentius a layman who, as Theodoret relates, Hist. lib. i. cap. 23, went from Alexandria to Ethiopia, and having there converted many proceeded to collect them into congregations and desired them to perform the divine offices, proves nothing although not unfrequently appealed to: for he went with others amongst whom probably were priests, and he was chiefly named as the promoter of the mission: as we learn from Socrates, Hist. lib. i. cap. 49, he came back himself to Alexandria and was consecrated the first bishop of the Church which he had planted. See Mosheim, book ii. part i. chap. i. § 20.

I shall have occasion presently to refer to the address of St. Laurence to pope Sixtus and shall here also speak of it, because from the received text in that place of the Benedictine edition of St. Ambrose it may be argued that deacons might consecrate the chalice. But as the very learned editors say in their note, tom. ii. p. 55, the term consecration is sometimes to be taken "pro ejusdem effectu, i.e. jam peracta consecratione." In this sense a sermon of Guerricus, an abbot, speaks of the people consecrating. And, if so: "sane diacono competit non tanquam uni e fidelium conventu, sed tanquam primario consecrantis sacerdotis ministro illius actioni cooperari per modum cujusdam, ut sic loquamur, concelebrationis:" and some authorities are cited in support of this interpretation. Again: "Secunda consecrationis acceptio, nimirum pro rei consecratæ distributione, omni prorsus caret offendiculo, maximeque nobis arridet: quia vox commisisti aliquid jam perfectum signat," &c. We must after all remember that dispensationem is the common reading.

HERFORD.

I shall add from an old writer: "Qui tibi offerunt, &c. In quibus verbis patenter ostenditur, quod a cunctis fidelibus, non solum viris, sed et mulieribus sacrificium illud laudis offertur, licet ab uno specialiter offerri sacerdote videatur. Quia quæ ille Deo offerendo manibus tractat, hæc multitudo fidelium intenta mentium devotione commendat. Quod illic quoque declaratur ubi dicitur, 'Hanc igitur oblationem servitutis nostræ, sed et cunctæ familiæ tuæ, ut placatus accipias.' Quibus verbis luce clarius constat, quia sacrificium, quod a sacerdote sacris altaribus superponitur, a cuncta Dei familia generaliter offeratur. Hanc autem ecclesiæ unitatem apostolus manifeste declarat cum dicit, 'unum corpus, unus panis, multi sumus.'" Petrus Damian. cap. viij.

Although "vel" may be rightly interpreted without difficulty, it is possible that originally the word crept into the prayer, as it were, by mistake. Many early manuscripts omit the clause "pro quibus tibi offerimus," and we may easily understand how when the words were first added it was with an intention that there should be a discretionary decision by the priest whether he would use them or the earlier and succeeding words only, "qui tibi offerunt." Some manuscripts are still extant in which the "vel" is written in red. At what time the addition "pro quibus tibi offerimus" was made is uncertain: some say it may be referred so far back as the sixth or seventh century. But there seems to be no doubt that the words are to be found in all manuscripts written after the eleventh century.

In the Roman use the "infra actionem" means the same thing : and in the most ancient manuscripts the terms are used indiscriminately, "propterea quod (says Le Brun) in hac missæ parte fit consecratio corporis Christi, actio scilicet omnium maxima." Infra, he continues, is but another word for intra ; and many examples of its use are to be found in councils, liturgies, and rituals. Infra octavam is commonly found for intra octavam.

But, on the other hand, the Gemma animæ tells us : "Hic (i. e. canon) etiam actio dicitur, quia causa populi in eo cum Deo agitur." Lib. i. cap. 103. And compare Radulph. Tungrensis, de canon. observant. prop. xxij, Bibl. patr. auct. tom. i. p. 1160.

¹⁴ (ac martyrum tuorum.) None are here commemorated by name who are placed in the Church lower in rank than the martyrs. The blessed Virgin although she departed at last in peace is entitled (as St. Jerome has said) to that rank also, having indeed suffered all the pains of it according to Simeon's prophecy.

Upon this point we may remember the fourth stanza of a very ancient English hymn to the blessed Virgin :—

"Heyl mayden, heyl modur, heyl martir trowe,

Warton's Hist. of English poetry, vol. ii. p. 152.

The reason why confessors are not added is either because the recital of the names was always in this great service strictly limited to those whose blood was poured out unto death, after the pattern of our blessed Lord Himself; or because this part of the canon is older than the third century, when the practice began of honouring the memory also of confessors. In the ninth century for a short time in some of the Gallic churches the names of a few confessors "erga quos major erat fidelium pietas" were introduced, but it was only for a short time. Le Brun, tom. i. p. 259. It is said that all those who are here commemorated suffered either in or near Rome. But there is a little difficulty about Cosmas and Damian, which has been met by the assertion that there were no less than three pairs so named; two in Asia, and the third in Rome. It will be seen below that the Golden legend says that they were Arabian martyrs.

universally adopted : none of the ancient missals admit it, nor indeed the word Amen in any part of the canon until the termination.

The elevation of the host at this time, before consecration, was a rite peculiar to the churches of Sarum, Bangor, and York. The Hereford rubric does not order an elevation ; nor has it been admitted into the Roman use. There is a very proper and obvious reason why elevation should not be ordered before consecration ; ill-taught people among the laity might naturally fall into the error of untimely adoration.

²⁷ Very anciently both in the eastern and the western churches these words were pronounced so that the people, at least those who were near, might hear and answer, Amen. This is according to the doctrine of the apostle, 1 Cor. xiv. 16, and is acknowledged by all the ritualists of any authority whatever. St. Ambrose says: "Ante consecrationem aliud dicitur, post consecrationem sanguis nuncupatur. Et tu dicis Amen, hoc est, verum est." Liber de mysteriis, cap. ix. 54; Opera, tom. ii. p. 340. Cardinal Bona cites this and another place from Florus (Expositio missæ), a writer of the ninth century: after which time he supposes the practice fell into disuse "quia post Florum, ejus mentionem non reperi apud ævi posterioris scriptores." Tom. iii. p. 276. Georgius, de liturg. pontif. tom. iii. p. 68, adds some further authorities upon the point, Tertullian, St. Augustine, and Paschasius Radbert: which he allows are clear for the custom in those ages of the Milan, African, and Gallican churches ; but does not admit that according to the Roman use the words were said otherwise than secretly, or that "Amen" was answered (as I have remarked above) until the end of the canon.

²⁸ "In many of the later editions, after hæc verba, there is added 'inclinat se sacerdos ad hostiam, et.' After the reconciliation with Rome in the reign of queen Mary there is a further addition in the missal, as printed in 1554—for the first time in any service book printed in England—of the words 'et capite inclinato illam adoret.'" Canon Simmons, note to Layfolks mass book, p. 283.

In forme of bred as I the se," &c.

MS. Cotton. Claudius A. 2. fol. 130.

In the year 1556 one of the injunctions issued by cardinal Pole was directed against the neglect of old practices, and the consequent irreverence which had spread amongst the people during the wild times of Edward the sixth: "Item, that all pariseners shall at the time of elevation reverentlie knele in souche places of the churche, where they maie both see and worshippe the blessed sacrament, not lurking behinde pillars, or holdinge downe their heads, or otherwise unreverently behavinge themselves at that time in especiall." Concil. tom. iv. p. 147.

Among the innumerable questions which theologians have discussed relating to the blessed eucharist is this: whether the bread is consecrated and becomes the Body of Christ without any consecration of the chalice. It has been decided by the greatest authorities that the bread is validly consecrated, "forma enim consecrationis panis neque quoad signi-

ficatum, neque quoad efficaciam pendet a forma consecrationis vini." But such a consecration, though valid, is not lawful: and a priest who so consecrates "magno se peccato astringeret." Benedict XIV. tom. ix. p. 318, who cites Andreas Zuccherius, Suarez, Aquinas, and Sylvius. He quotes also the following from St. Bernard, ep. 69, whose argument does not appear however to be convincing, because our blessed Lord did not consecrate bread only and we can have no right to theorise upon the supposition that He did. St. Bernard's words are: "Puto enim, quod si Dominus post factum de pane suum corpus, vini consecrationem placuisset aliquandiu intermittere, aut certe penitus omittere: nihilominus corpus mansisset quod fecerat, nec factis facienda præscriberent. Nec nego panem et vinum aqua quidem mixtum simul debere apponi: quin potius assero, haud aliter debere fieri. Sed aliud est culpæ negligentiam, aliud negare efficaciam. Aliud, inquam, est quod causamur non bene quidpiam fieri, et aliud quod mentimur nec fieri." This epistle was written upon an occasion of the chalice not being consecrated through negligence.

³⁰ (Elevet.) No mention of the elevation is made by the early ritualists, Alcuin, or Amalarius, or Walafrid Strabo, or Micrologus; nor is there any allusion to it in the old ordines Romani, or the sacramentaries of Gelasius or Gregory. It is commonly said that the first order was based upon the decree of the council of Lateran (about transubstantiation) under Innocent III. But there is no doubt that in some churches elevation was already the practice. It is not proved by the passage from Ivo Carnotensis which cardinal Bona cites, lib. 2. xij. 2, because Ivo does not even speak of it: but the following canon seems clear which Georgius, de liturg. pont. tom. iii. 72, has brought forward. A council at Paris, A.D. 1188, ordered thus: 'Præcipitur presbyteris, ut cum in canone missae incœperint, qui pridie quam pateretur, tenentes hostiam, ne elevent eam statim nimis alte, ita quod possit ab omnibus videri a populo, sed quasi ante pectus detineant, donec dixerint, Hoc est corpus meum; et tunc elevent eam, ut possit ab omnibus vidēri.” The same author cites one or two others of about the same date. See also Durant, de ritibus, lib. ii. cap. 40, and Durand, lib. iv. cap. 41, and Sala’s notes to Bona, tom. iii. p. 283.

The canon of the council of Paris, above, has reference to a practice which about the thirteenth century was common in some places, for the priest to elevate before he had finished the words of consecration. The synod of Exeter, A.D. 1287, has a canon upon this point: “Quia vero per hæc verba, Hoc est enim corpus meum, et non per alia, panis transubstantiatur in corpus Christi, prius hostiam non levet sacerdos donec ista plene protulerit verba, ne pro creatore creatura a populo veneretur.” The canon goes on to explain what is to be done immediately after the consecration: “Hostia autem ita levetur in altum, ut a fidelibus circumstantibus valeat intueri; per hoc enim fidelium devotio excitatur, et fidei meritum suscipiat incrementum.” Then follows a caution, which would not be always out of place now-a-days, against a style of exaggerated reverence which is rather an irreverence: “parochiani vero solícite exhortentur, ut in elevatione corporis Christi non irreverenter se inclinent, sed genua flectant, et creatorem suum adorent omni devotione et reverentia.” Concilia, tom. ii. p. 132.

At this time the sacring bell was rung: how much oftener in the service in mediæval times it is not possible to decide. The English canons refer only, so far as I remember, to the ringing after the consecration. For example, a synod at Worcester in 1240: “Cum autem in celebratione missæ corpus Domini per manus sacerdotum in altum erigitur, campanella pulsetur.” Concil. tom. i. p. 667. The usual practice of the Roman catholic Church in England is to ring thrice at the sanctus, once at the words “Hanc igitur oblationem,” three times at the elevation of the host, three times at the elevation of the chalice, and three times at the Domine noster sum dignus.

The bell to be rung according to the order of archbishop Peckham’s constitution was the bell which was fixed outside

On which Lyndwood observes: "Campanæ. Non intelligas de pluribus illo tempore simul pulsandis in una ecclesia, quia sufficit unam sonari. Et hæc pulsatio fieri debet de campanis illis quæ longius possent audiri, quod satis patet per rationem quæ sequitur;" lib. iii. tit. 21, verb. campanæ. We might probably conclude from this that Lyndwood objected to the use of the small bell over the chancel if there were larger bells in the tower. But the practice, almost beyond doubt, would be against his objection; and for one very common reason, namely, the tone of the "sacring bell" would be well known and the purpose of ringing it easily recognised.

In the British museum among the Harleian manuscripts (no. 955) is a volume of occasional prayers, collects, antiphons, &c. There are in it many indulgences granted to the monastery of Sion, to which the book formerly belonged; and one of them is this: "Also he that saith at saking time this prayer: Ave verum corpus natum ex Maria virgine: vere passum, immolatum in cruce pro homine: cujus latus perforatum vero fluxit sanguine: esto nobis prægustatum, mortis in examine. O clemens: O pie: O dulcis Jesu fili Mariæ, nobis peccatoribus quæsumus miserere. Amen. he schall haue .CCC. daies of pardon." Lyndwood tells us that he used this prayer.

The reader cannot but observe that the above is in a rhyming metre: but I have not altered the arrangement of the manuscript. It is a famous antiphon: and sometimes is found with variations, especially,

"Cujus latus perforatum, Unda fluxit et sanguine."

Hence it would seem that in St. Anselm's time the custom of England was different from that of after-years, unless the church of Canterbury varied in this respect from the churches of Salisbury, York, &c. But we must not forget that the archbishop was not deciding the question.

⁴⁰ The number of crosses made during the mass, according to the rubrics of the old English uses, was somewhat large: and they are as many, at least, in number according to the present use of the Roman catholic church. Beyond question there were not so many in primitive times nor in the centuries which immediately followed. They gradually increased; and we ought to believe that, equally beyond question, none was added without what was supposed to be a proper reason and sufficient symbolical meaning. Amalarius, writing in the ninth century, says, "Cæterum de crucibus, quas solemus diverso modo facere super panem et vinum non est quid dicam, cur tali et in tali loco figantur, vel quare

Amalarius presently continues: "Videtur mihi, si semel fuerit facta crux super panem et vinum posse sufficere, quia Dominus semel crucifixus est. Non ab re est si bis figatur, quia pro duobus populis fixus est Christus."

In examining early manuscripts the absence of many of the crosses which are found in missals of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries must often be remarked. Whether some others were signed, nevertheless, in the actual celebration—the priest recollecting what should be done instead of referring to his book—must remain doubtful. It cannot be Evangelists, deacons, apostles, disciples, bishops, popes, priests, exorcists, the married and the virgin states, are all included. The only name which requires a remark is that of St. John: many ritualists explain that it refers to St. John the baptist, who is especially commemorated in this place in the liturgies of St. Basil and St. Chrysostom. On the other hand the opinion given in the Gemma animæ (lib. i. cap. 107) seems the most reasonable, that the evangelist St. John is meant.

⁵⁶ (Discoopertam.) Vide note 82. p. 85. The reason why it was now held uncovered is stated in the rubric of the modern Paris missal that the people might know that the time of communicating was close at hand. One of the prayers in the Salisbury pontifical at the consecrating of a paten refers to this especial use of it: "Consecrare digneris hanc patenam in administrationem eucharistiæ." See the office in the Monumenta ritualia, vol. i. p. 175.

⁵⁷ Very anciently the people joined with the priest here in repeating aloud the whole of the Lord's prayer. This is clear from a passage in St. Gregory of Tours: "factum est autem cum dominica oratio diceretur, hæc aperto ore cœpit sanctam orationem cum reliquis decantare." He is relating a miracle worked in the case of a deaf woman; de mirac. S. Martini, l. ii. c. 30. This continued in the Gallic churches up to about the eleventh century: for Ivo Carnotensis observes that by these words "Præceptis salutaribus," &c. the priest exhorts the people to repeat this prayer with him. In the earliest ages the use of the Lord's prayer was allowed only to those who had been baptized: and in the old Ordo Romanus it was taught upon the fourth day after the fourth sunday in lent to all who were about to be admitted to communion on the easter eve. See Bona, tom. iii. p. 324.

The Ambrosian missal has a form still stronger than the old rubrics of the English church: "Corpus tuum frangitur, Christe, calix benedicitur." These expressions undeniably touch upon some of the most mysterious of all Roman catholic doctrines connected with the blessed eucharist; and at one time efforts were made to alter the wording of the Milan liturgy. But no less undeniable is the truth as expressed in the well-known hymn, Lauda Sion salvatorem:—

"Fracto demum sacramento,

rubrics. The explanation of the terms is given by Benedict XIV. in his work upon the mass: namely, that by "frangitur corpus Christi" we are to understand "franguntur species;" lib. ii. cap. 23.

Compare the rubric in the Sarum office for Good Friday; when, after the bringing back to the altar the host which had been reserved in the sepulchre, the priest is thus directed: "Deinde dicat, Libera nos, quæsumus, et Da propitius. In qua oratione dum dicitur per eundem, frangat corpus Domini sicut solet fieri cæteris diebus."

⁶³ (Et frangat in tres partes.) Upon this rite which Bona calls as it indeed is "antiquissimus," and which may be traced up to perhaps the apostolic age, I would recommend the reader to consult the authors whom he cites; also Bingham, book xv. cap. iii, with Sala's reply, in his notes upon cardinal Bona, tom. iii. p. 328. The Greek Church divides into four parts, and the Mozarabic missal orders division into nine portions: to which separate names are given, having reference to the life, passion, and glory of our blessed Saviour.

According to the Mozarabic missal priests were allowed to give this benediction: and the eighteenth canon of the fourth council of Toledo insists on their doing so: "Nonnulli sacerdotes post dictam orationem dominicam statim communicant et postea benedictionem populo dant: quod deinceps interdiximus: sed post orationem dominicam, benedictio in populum sequatur." Mabillon says that the same permission existed very anciently in the Gallic liturgy; De lit. Gall. lib. i. 4. 13. The reader will find one or two examples of these episcopal benedictions in the Additional Notes, which will enable him to judge of their general character.

The episcopal benedictions during mass are not unfrequently alluded to in ancient documents. For example: in the year 1309 a solemn mass was celebrated before the opening of the council of London: "Et est sciendum quod Norwicensis, qui celebravit missam, dedit solemnem benedictionem in missa." Wilkins, Concilia, tom. ii. p. 304. Again, in the account of the mass before a provincial synod in the same year we read: "In fine vero missæ, ante Agnus Dei, prædictus episcopus Norwyc. de præcepto et licentia speciali Cantuar. archiepiscopi solennem benedictionem super populum fecit. Expleta missa archiepiscopus benedictionem populo dedit." Concilia, tom. ii. p. 312.

At this period of the service denunciations of excommunications, and prayers, sometimes were also to be said: some examples of which are given by Bona, and by Angelo Rocca de campanis. To those I would add from Wilkins: "Advertentes insuper præsentium turbationum pericula, quæ veraciter ex nostris excessibus et delictis causari creduntur,

The following, again, from the oath of an abbot of Westminster for fulfilling the will of king Henry the seventh : "Item I shall cause every monke singing and sayeing in the chapitre masse in the said monasterie . . . to sing and sey deuoutly for the same kyng, at euery such masse after the fraccion of the holy sacrament, and before the holye prayer of Agnus Dei, all such special psalms, orations and prayers for the same kyng, as be conteigned in the same indentures." Dugdale, Monast. Anglic. vol. i. p. 279.

To this part of the service are also to be referred the Preces in prostratione, which are commonly found in the printed editions of the Sarum missal according to the rubric : "et sciendum est quod in omni missa quando de feria dicitur fiat prostratio a toto choro statim post Sanctus usque Pax Domini, per totum annum : nisi a pascha usque, Deus omnium." These prayers consisted of three psalms, Deus venerunt gentes, Deus misereatur nostri, and Domine in virtute tua ; followed by some verses and responses, and three collects, viz. "Oremus. A similar office is appointed in the other English missals; but they vary as to the days on which it may be said. Thus, the York use appoints two different arrangements of psalms and prayers; the Bangor has one only; and so the Hereford. The order of this last is as follows:—

“Alia oratio. Miserere quæsumus, Domine, populo tuo: et continuis tribulationibus laborantem propitius respirare concede. Per Dominum.

⁶⁷ See a very learned disquisition in Gerbert, de musica, tom. i. p. 454, &c., as to the ancient custom of singing or saying this, and whether the people joined with the choir. A passage in Ælfric's homilies appears to prove that in his time the Agnus Dei was sung in the churches of England: "Be þam singað Godes þeowas æt ælcere mæssan. Agnus Dei qui tollis peccata mundi, miserere nobis. þat is on urum geþeode," &c. Hom. in di. sanct. paschæ. It was forbidden on easter eve in that age by the canons of Ælfric (whether the same Ælfric I cannot say): "On easter eve, let there not be sung at the mass-offering, neither Agnus Dei, nor 'Communio,' but among those who desire the housel, let the chanter begin: Alleluia," &c. Secunda quia non communicamus mortuis, quia nobis non respondent: unde est quod corpus nunquam debet esse in ecclesia quamdiu missa de die celebratur. Tertia est quoniam sicut ex multis granis collectis unus panis efficitur et ex multis racemis vinum eliquatur, sic et ex multis fidelibus (quorum quidam boni, quidam mali) una ecclesia constituitur et coadunatur. Agnus Dei, dum celebratur missa. Antiquitus enim tribus vicibus uniformiter dicebatur; miserere nobis: sed ob multas et varias ecclesiæ olim adversitates ecclesia cœpit ad Dominum de tribulatione clamare: Dona nobis pacem." Angelo Rocca, de campanis, cap. xvij. He goes on to quote from pope Innocent the practice still observed "in basilica Lateranensi" (as being the most ancient church) of repeating the miserere nobis three times: and complains that Durand in his Rationale, lib. iv. cap. 25, has spoken of this and of the alteration without acknowledging the authority of Innocent.

At this part of the mass the corporal oath was taken: whether always so may be doubted; but Walsingham gives us an example on a very important occasion, when peace was made in 1360 between Edward the third and Charles the fifth of France. This extract serves also to explain the meaning of corporal oath; on which some remarks are made in the Mon. ritualia, vol. 2. p. 1j. It is clear that in the present instance Charles touched the paten on which lay the consecrated host, and the missal also, as containing the holy gospels:—

"Parisiis igitur celebrata solenni missa, dictoque ter Agnus Dei, adjecto Dona nobis pacem, dictus Carolus dextram super patenam, cum corpore dominico, et lævam super missale posuit, hæc verba proferens: Nos Carolus juramus ad sacrosancta corpus Domini et evangelia firmiter servare penes nos pacem," &c. *Hist. It is not in the Roman use in the editions of the fifteenth century. ⁷⁶ (Diaconus pacem recipiat.) "Pax: instrumentum, quod inter missarum solemnium populo osculandum præbetur." Duncane, gloss. The introduction of the pax instead of the old practice of mutual salutation was not until about the thirteenth century. In a council held at York in the year 1250 under Walter Gray, archbishop, the earliest mention occurs of the pax or Osculatorium as used in England. It is named among the ornaments and furniture of the altar which were to be provided by the parishioners. Wilkins, Concil. i. 698. Again, in the same collection, ii. 280, we find a similar order to have been made in the province of Canterbury in the year 1305 at the council of Merton: "tabulas pacis ad osculatorium." Both of these constitutions are to be found also in Johnson's Eccles. laws, vol. ii. Several figures of the pax are given in works relating to the subject, and in many of the printed editions of the Sarum missal it is represented as part of the furniture of the altar in the woodcut which commonly precedes the service for advent sunday.

The mediæval practice during synods at solemn celebration of mass before the archbishop of Canterbury was that the bishop of Winchester should carry to him the pax. Archbishop Parker says: "Hujus proprium fuit in missis auream pacem accipere, eandemque ad archiepiscopum osculandam deferre et altari referre." But Parker is careful also to explain that this custom was observed only "in profligatis illis papisticis ritibus pomposis atque solennibus." De ant. Brit. eccl. p. 30. Parker's old puritan adversary (quoted above, p. 30) remarks on this, "what a worthye reputacion the bishoppe off Winchester thought y^t to bee for a commendacion off honour to carie him the golden pax, for his superstitious lippes to kisse." Sign. D. ij.

Le Brun, tom. i. p. 292, has an interesting disquisition on the subject of the pax; and in a note states that the reason why it also in its own turn fell into disuse abroad was the quarrels about precedency which it occasioned among the people. Sometimes this jealousy led to great irreverence. In 1496 one Johanna Dyaca, of the parish of All Saints, Stanyng, was presented before the archdeacon of Middlesex, "quod projecit le paxbrede ad terram, in ecclesia, ea occasione quod alia mulier ejusdem parochie osculavit ante eam." Hale's Precedents, cxcj. Chaucer, more than a hundred years before this time, had also spoken of the same matter. He makes the Parson in his Tale say of the proud man that "he awaiteth to sit, or els to go above him in the waie, or kisse paxe, or be encenced before his neighbour," &c. Notices of the pax are common in monastic and church inventories. In the Rites of Durham abbey we are told that they possessed "a marvelous faire booke, which had the epistles and gospels in it, the which booke had on the outside of the coveringe the picture of our saviour Christ, all of silver—whiche booke did serve for the pax in the masse;" p. 7. A book which an abbot of Glastonbury gave to the high altar might have and possibly did answer the same purpose: "unum textum argenteum et auratum, cum crucifixo, Maria et Johanne, splendidus emalatum." Johan. Glaston. de rebus Glaston.; Hearne, p. 265. Examples of paxes are to be seen in many public collections of works of mediæval art. In London some are in the British museum; and more are in the collections at South Kensington, in metal, silver, and ivory. They are generally carved with some scriptural subject, and occasionally have inscriptions. For instance, I have seen on one the appropriate prayer, "Da pacem, Domine, in diebus nostris:" on another, above the annunciation, "Ave Maria:" on a third, representing the nativity with the shepherds, "Gloria in excelsis Deo, et in terra pax." In small or poor parishes it is probable that paxes were often made of wood. None in that mean material are known to exist, but "iij lyttel pax-bredes of tre" belonged to the parish of St. Mary Chepe in 1431. A list of goods destroyed in the diocese of Lincoln by the commissioners in 1566 (printed by Mr. Peacock) tells us of "a paxe of wood" burnt at Baston, another at Dunsbie, and another at Haconbie.

HERFORD.

One of the latest notices, if not the last, in England of the use of the pax is in the injunctions given in 1548 (2 Edw. VI) to the deanery of Doncaster: "And the clerk in like manner shall bring down the pax, and standing without the church door shall say boldly to the people these words: 'This is a token of joyfull peace, which is betwixt God and men's conscience. Christ alone is the peace-maker, which straitly commands peace between brother and brother.'" Hierurgia Anglic. p. 2. The "church door" here spoken of refers to the door in the roodscreen between the nave and chancel of the church. See note in Monum. ritualia, vol. i. p. 50.

In some remarks on the pax which I had occasion to make in a dissertation on mediæval carvings in ivory I drew attention to a passage in the third act of Shakspeare's Henry the fifth, scene 5. Bardolph is to be hanged because he "hath stolen a pax," a "pax of little price." Until lately the editors printed the word as "pyx:" but Shakspeare lived too near the time when both were in general use to be ignorant of the distinction between them; although Dr. Johnson (who, after all, could not know everything) informs us that the two words "signified the same thing." I would refer for what I further said to the note itself; Ivories, ancient and mediæval, p. lxxxj.

though (as I also remarked) they could not be those which originally had been there; and the other had lost the leaf altogether. I was not then aware (through some error which I cannot now account for) that the copy which I spoke of as being in St. John's college, Oxford, was not a York (see pref. first edit. p. lxxvii) but a Hereford missal. This book upon examination, though very imperfect and mutilated in many places, yet happily supplies the perfect text in this important prayer, as I have given it above.

Since the publication of that edition I have also found this prayer, occupying somewhat the same place in the canon, in the manuscript missal said to have belonged to the church of St. Paul's, London; and of which I have spoken in the preface to the present edition.

⁸⁰ It will be observed that the English uses differ in the form at the priest's receiving. When laity communicated there was also a considerable variety in the words used. From St. Ambrose, de sacramentis, lib. iv. cap. 5, and from St. Augustine, serm. 272, 332, we may conclude that as in the Clementine liturgy the simple words were said, "Corpus Christi:" to which was answered "Amen." Many forms of later ages, in delivering both the Body and the Blood to the people, may be seen collected in Georgius, tom. iii. lib. iv. cap. xix. Several again in the various orders printed by Martene, in his

"Si qui sint sacram communionem accepturi, sacerdos non eos differat post missæ finem sine necessitate. Ordo enim postulat, ut communio populi fiat intra missam, et immediate sequatur communionem sacerdotis." Cap. x.

So, also, the Roman ritual : "Communio autem populi infra missam fieri debet (nisi quandoque ex rationabili causa post missam sit facienda) cum orationes, quæ in missa post communionem dicuntur, non solum ad sacerdotem sed etiam ad alios communicantes spectant."

I need scarcely add that for many ages before the reformation (probably from the eleventh century) communion was given in the church of England in one kind only. We may take the reasons for this from Lyndwood : "Quæ est ratio " (he enquires) "quare laicis non datur eucharistia sub duplici specie?" We may observe that as mere communicants clerics as well as laity were under the same rule : the priest could receive in both kinds only if he also consecrated : "Dic, una ratio est, quia sic possent credere quod totus Christus non esset sub eadem specie. Alia ratio est propter periculum, quia de facili posset effundi sanguis. Tertia est ut veritas respondeat umbræ, quia in lege non habebant offerentes de libamine. Alia potest esse ratio, quia non esset decens nec securum, ut tantum conficeretur de sanguine, quantum sufficeret uni magnæ parochiæ, in qua sunt quandoque multa millia personarum, nec posset altare tale vas in quo conficeretur recipere." Lib. i. tit. i, Altissimus, verb. vinum purum.

After receiving the communion people in the middle ages were given unconsecrated wine, of which they took a small portion. Repeated injunctions were laid upon parish priests that they should carefully explain that the wine so given was merely wine, and that the Blood of our Lord had been already received under one kind only.

The rubrics at the beginning of the Roman missal still prescribe the same rule; but in practice, at least everywhere in England, the observance of it has long been forgotten: "Minister autem dextra manu tenens vas cum vino et aqua, sinistra vero mappulam, aliquanto post sacerdotem eis porrigit purificationem, et mappulam ad os abstergendum." Ritus celebr. missæ. x.

Upon the mode of receiving I need scarcely remind the reader of the famous passage in St. Cyril, Catech. mystag. v. cap. xxj: and according to the same feelings the Church has always insisted upon outward gestures of reverence and awe; not merely by way of decency as on less solemn occasions but here as of actual necessity. As St. Augustine declares, "nemo carnem illam manducat nisi prius adoraverit." Enar. in ps. xcvi. 5. I shall only add a passage from St. Chrysostom, as cited and translated by an Anglican writer in the seventeenth century: "This Body the wise men revered, even when it lay in the manger, and approaching thereto worshipped with great fear and trembling. Let us therefore who are citizens of heaven imitate at least these barbarians. . . But thou seest this Body not in the manger, but on the altar; not held by a woman, but presented by the priest. . . Let us therefore stir up ourselves, and show far greater reverence than those barbarians, lest by our careless and rude coming we heap fire on our heads." Homil. xxiv, cit. Ashwell, Gestus eucharisticus; cf. also pp. 46 and 120. And in Lactantius, de morte persec., the vision of St. Perpetua; cited by Gerbert, tom. i. p. 125: "ego accepi junctis manibus."

How long the custom continued of receiving the eucharist into the hands is uncertain. "Primis temporibus (says Mabillon, Mus. Ital. 2. lix) eucharistia etiam laicis tribuebatur in manus." There is a canon of the council of Toledo, A.D. 400: "Si quis acceptam a sacerdote eucharistiam non sumpserit, veluti sacrilegus repellatur." But this is directed against the heresy of the Priscillianists. The old form was first given up at Rome, before the age of St. Gregory the great: but for some long time after it was still retained in other churches. We hear of a certain abbess, St. Odilia, into whose hands not only the host but the chalice was delivered in the eighth century; præfat. in sæc. iii, Benedict. p. i, observat. x. Georgius, tom. iii. p. 174, from whom I quote the above, cites also St. Cæsar of Arles, who proves that men and women received differently: "viri enim, quando ad altare accessuri sunt, lavant manus suas, et omnes mulieres nitida exhibent linteamina ubi corpus Christi accipiant." See, almost word for word, St. Augustine, Serm. 152 (cit. Casalius, p. 91). There is an express canon in the year 578: "Ne liceat mulieri nuda manu eucharistiam accipere." Concil. Autisiodor. And another canon of the same council orders that "unaquæque mulier (quando communicat) dominicalem suam habeat." As to what this dominicale was, Baronius, Mabillon, and many others suppose it to be the same as the linteamina above: but Stephen Baluze says it was a covering for the head, resting his opinion upon a council of Angers: "Si mulier communicans dominicale suum super caput suum non habuerit, usque candi, eos communicet, antequam se purificet. Postea dicit:

ad alium diem non communicet." The Anglo-saxon rule was, "mulieribus licet sub nigro velamine eucharistiam accipere." Egbert, Confessional. 37. It is difficult to explain a later canon under king Edgar: "We enjoin that no woman come near to the altar while mass is celebrating." Thorpe, vol. i. p. 255. One thing is clear, that women were not permitted to receive with uncovered hands. To return to men: Bede records the death in the year 680 of Cædmon, a monk, who feeling himself dying "interrogavit, si eucharistiam intus haberent. . . Rursus ille: 'et tamen,' ait, 'afferte mihi eucharistiam.' Qua accepta in manu, interrogavit, si omnes placidum erga se animum haberent," &c. Hist. eccles. lib. iv. cap. 24.

Very anciently there seems to have been great difference of practice as to the administration of the chalice by deacons. Martene, de ant. rit. lib. i. c. iv, brings many examples by which he proves that it was not only allowed but general: and there is the well-known complaint of St. Laurence to pope Sixtus: "Quo sacerdos sancte sine diacono properas? nunquid degenerem me probasti? experire, utrum idoneum magistrum elegeris, cui commisisti dominici sanguinis dispensationem." As Merati remarks upon Gavantus, tom. i. p. 230, citing this; St. Laurence says not the Body, but the Blood: as if to give the chalice was an especial part of the office of deacons. On the other hand, we have St. Chrysostom, Hom. 46. in Matt., declaring that none but a priest can administer the chalice, and the fifteenth canon of the second council of Arles decreeing that when a priest is present a deacon may not administer "the body of the Lord;" which seems still further to limit the canon of the council of Nice, viz. that deacons should not "give the body of Christ" to priests. The sixteenth of the canons of Ælfric allows deacons to "baptize children, and housel the people:" which, if there should be any doubt, is fully explained in the pastoral epistle

BANGOR.

of the same Ælfric: "the deacon may give the bread, and baptize children." Thorpe, Ancient laws and institutes, vol. ii. pp. 349, 379.

But this canon of the council of Nice may be reconciled with the others by remembering that deacons were forbidden by it to distribute to priests; in which case there would be conveyed a tacit permission that they might to the laity. There seems to be no ground for supposing that the Nicene fathers intended in any way to oppose the custom of the first and apostolic age when, as St. Justin tells us (Apolog. ii.), the deacons carried the eucharist to the absent and the sick. The thirty-eighth canon of the fourth council of Carthage, A.D. 252, is very much to the point: "Præsente presbytero, diaconus eucharistiam corporis Christi populo, si necessitas cogat, jussus erogat." And with this Lyndwood agrees, in his gloss upon the text, Diaconi baptizare non præsumant, nisi," &c.: "In casu necessitatis, absente presbytero, potest diaconus suo jure baptizare, et corpus Christi erogare infirmis: sed in ecclesia præsentē presbytero non potest, etiamsi necessitas exigat, nisi jussus a presbytero, puta, cum multi sint qui indigent baptismo, et presbyter non potest omnibus sufficere. Similiter, si multi volunt accipere corpus Christi, nec presbyter sufficit omnibus." Lib. iii. tit. 24, Baptisterium habeatur. So that in all these cases an express command from the priest was necessary, that deacons might not presume; and attempt even perhaps to consecrate: as may be inferred from the twenty-fifth chapter of the council of Laodicea, cited by Cas-sander, Opera, p. 73: "Non oportet diacono panem dare, nec calicem benedicere." One word upon the address of St. Laurence to pope Sixtus cited above. I would remind the reader that in the text of the Benedictine edition of the works of St. Ambrose, upon whose authority the tradition mainly rests, the reading is not dispensationem but consecrationem. De off. lib. i. 41, tom. ii. p. 55. If this latter is correct, it can only be understood in a very extended sense. See above, note 12. p. 127.

An abuse seems to have crept in in England about the thirteenth century, which is thus described and forbidden in the constitutions of Walter Cantilupe bishop of Worcester: "Audivimus autem quidem, quod merito credimus reprobandum, quod quidam sacerdotes parochianos suos, cum communicant, offerre compellunt: propter quod simul communicant, et offerunt, per quod venalis exponi videtur corporis et sanguinis Christi hostia pretiosa: hoc, quod execrabile sit, nullus ambigit sanæ mentis: hoc igitur avaritiæ horrendum vitium. interdicimus et execramus." Wilkins, Concilia, tom. i. p. 671. So, once more, a canon of a synod of the diocese of Chichester in 1289: "In sacrosancto die paschæ, sine ulla exactione decimæ vel debiti, seu oblationis, liberaliter conferant corpus Christi; ne una manu porrigendo eucharistiam, altera recipiendo pecuniam, nostræ redemptionis mysterium fiat venale. Quod si compertum sit fieri, præcipimus hujusmodi flagitiosum commercium severitate canonica graviter vindicari." Concil. tom. 2. p. 170; cf. tom. 3. p. 60.

In the first age of the Church all who were present at the service of the blessed eucharist, except those under discipline, partook of the communion: the prayers alone of the liturgies, even had we no other evidence, abundantly testify that they were drawn up on the supposition of the presence of many communicants. Micrologus in the eleventh century says: "sciendum est, juxta antiquos patres, quod soli communicantes divinis mysteriis interesse consueverunt." Cap. 51. Cardinal Bona adds "hanc consuetudinem diu perstitisse evidens est," and goes on to speak of some churches at Rome where the priest is not permitted to communicate alone at high mass: "In missa solemnî retenta est ab aliquibus ecclesiis communio ministrorum, quæ Romæ nunc permanet in insignioribus basilicis, et ubi desierat, apostolicæ visitationis decreto restituta est. Sapientissimo sane consilio, ne in consuetudinem abeat antiquissimus ecclesiæ ritus, sine quo vix possunt intelligi, quæ in liturgicis orationibus quotidie recitantur." Rerum. liturg. lib. ii. cap. xvii. 2. is in the singular, however, in the old missal edited by Flacius Illyricus: but that can scarcely prove much, as it seems allowed that that famous blunder (as regarded the purpose of its first editor) is rather to be considered as a manual of occasional prayers which might be used by the priest, mixed up in no exact arrangement with the much more ancient

⁹³ During lent a prayer was appointed in the old English missals to be said after the postcommunion, called the "super populum." and was preceded by the form, "Humiliate capita vestra Deo." This custom was very ancient, as may be seen by an examination of cardinal Thomasius' edition of the Gelasian sacramentary, and was for a long time said during the whole year: but afterwards was restricted to the season of lent, that the people might during their discipline be the better fortified by the prayers and benedictions of the Church against the malice of the devil. As Amalarius tells us the intention was, "si omni tempore necesse est paratum esse bellicosum, adversus insidias sive impetus inimicorum: quanto magis in procinctu? Quadragesimali tempore scit adversarius noster a sancta ecclesia singulare certamen commissum esse contra se. . . . Vult sacerdos noster ut nostris armis vestiti simus: propterea jubet per ministrum, ut humiliemus capita nostra Deo, et ita tandem infundit super milites protectionem benedictionis suæ." Lib. iii. cap. 37; compare Micrologus, cap. 51. These prayers are still retained in the Roman missal.

⁹⁴ (Benedicamus Domino.) The reason why sometimes this form and sometimes the "Ite missa est" was used seems to be that upon the lesser festivals only the more religious and spiritually disposed would make a practice of being present, who were not to be so suddenly (as it were) dismissed, but rather were to give thanks to God. Upon the greater feasts a large number of people of all occupations would probably attend, and to these the "Ite missa est" would be a licence to depart. See Micrologus, cap. 46.

Dicto Ite missa est, vel Benedicamus Domino, sacerdos inclinat se ante medium altaris, et manibus junctis super illud, dicit :

etiam, Te Deum, et Ite missa est, recitamus." Cap. 46. That is, upon the Lord's day and the greater festivals.

"Ad missas de Requiem quod attinet, Stephanus Augustodunensis ex 600 jam annis nos monuit loco Ite missa est, dici Requiescant in pace. . . . Non ergo populum per Ite missa est dimitti congrueret, cum fere missam sepultura precesque consequantur, quæ sane persuadere adstantibus debent, ut ne recedant." Le Brun, i. 323 ; and Beletus, cap. 49.

⁹⁸ According to the old English uses the mass ended with the "Ite missa est" or the "Benedicamus Domino;" and the people then were at liberty to leave the church : though it is not likely that many left until they knew that the prayer "Placeat tibi" had been said. This prayer was in very early times left to the discretion and devotion of the priest to be said or not as he thought proper. The reason why the final blessing was not given to the people in England before the seventeenth century may probably have been because of the episcopal benedictions which were to be said before the Agnus Dei. The date of the addition of the benediction to the Roman use is uncertain : but when first added only a bishop was allowed to give it. Some writers have carried the date up to the tenth or ninth century, because the blessing of the people at the end of the mass is mentioned by early ritualists. But the blessing so spoken of refers to the post-communion. This is clear from the words of Walafrid Strabo (A.D. 830) : "Statutum est, ut populus ante benedictionem sacerdotis non egrediatur de missa. Quæ benedictio intelligitur illa ultima sacerdotis oratio." Cap. 22.

Although this prayer is not in the old ordines Romani it is nevertheless very ancient, and occurs in the manuscript edited by Illyricus, in many others of equal date, and is noticed by Micrologus. Another reason why the ordines omit it possibly is because in fact the service is already over, having concluded with the "Ite missa est." So in many manuscripts it is headed post missam, and Micrologus says: "Finita missa dicit, Placeat tibi, sancta Trinitas." Cap. 23.

⁹⁹ This lection was the first fourteen verses of the first chapter of the gospel according to St. John. It has been said that it was not obligatory according to the Roman use until the last revision, after the council of Trent; but the rubrics of the Bangor and Sarum missals do not seem to leave a discretion. In some of the churches of France this last gospel is still read not at the altar but as in England anciently in returning to the sacristy; in others standing at the entrance to it; and again, in some, in the sacristy. Many of the monastic uses omitted this gospel.

The directions when this gospel is now to be omitted according to the Roman liturgy, and another read in its stead, are given in the Rubr. gen. xij. 2.

The Bangor use agrees in the main with the above. The York has also nearly the same verses and responses with one collect only, viz. “Deus, qui tribus:” headed “¶ Orationes post missam communes.” The Hereford appoints similar verses and responses and the prayer “Deus, qui tribus,” followed by “Alia oratio. Protector in te sperantium Deus, sine quo nihil est validum, nihil sanctum: multiplica super nos misericordiam tuam, ut te rectore, te duce, sic transeamus per bona temporalia, ut non amittamus æterna. Per.”

On the same page immediately preceding the canon in the Salisbury missal of 1492, upon which is the “oratio dicenda ante missam” which I have already given (note 1. p. 2), is the following “Oratio dicenda post missam. Omnipotens sempiternæ Deus Jesu Christe Domine, esto propitius peccatis meis, per assumptionem corporis et sanguinis tui. Tu enim loquens dixisti: qui manducat meam carnem et bibit meum sanguinem, in me manet et ego in eo, ideo te supplex deprecor: ut in me cor mundum crees, et spiritum rectum in visceribus meis innoves, et spiritu principali me confirmare digneris, atque ab omnibus insidiis diaboli ac vitiis emundes: ut gaudiorum cœlestium merear esse particeps. Qui vivis et regnas Deus, per omnia sæcula sæculorum. Amen.”

Many editions contain more prayers to be said at the priest’s choice both before and after the service. The Bangor and Hereford missals do not give any: in my copy of the

York use a very long prayer is printed before the ordinary, to be said before the service, "quam sanctus Augustinus composuit:" and the following at the end of the canon:—

"¶ Oratio dicenda post celebrationem missæ. Gratias ago tibi, dulcissime Domine Jesu Christe, lux vera, salus credentium, solatium tristium, spesque cunctorum, gaudium angelorum: qui me miserum et magnum peccatorem famulum tuum hodie sacratissimo corpore et sanguine tuo pascere dignatus es. Ideo et ego miserrimus et innumerabilibus criminibus infectus, lachrymosis precibus imploro benignissimam misericordiam tuam, et summam clementiam, ut hæc dulcissima refectio, summa et incomprehensibilis communio, non sit mihi judicium animæ meæ sed prosit mihi in remedium ad evacuandas omnes insidias et nequitias diabolicæ fraudis, ita ut nulla ejus dominetur iniquitas in corde, corpore, anima, et sensibus meis, sed tua clementia me perducatur ad superna convivia angelorum, ubi tu es vera beatitudo, clara lux, sempiterna lætitia. Amen."

Additional Note.

I.

SOME observations still remain which perhaps may fitly be put together in this place, and some extracts and other documents relating to the Liturgy, by way of an additional note; which I trust will not be found altogether without their use.

I. First then, upon the origin of the word Missa. Some, with Baronius, have traced it to the Hebrew Missah, which signifies an oblation: others to the Greek μύησις: and some few, of whom Albaspinæus is the chief authority, to the German Mess or Mes. With respect to this last derivation or guess a superficial modern writer, notwithstanding that it has been long exploded among the best learned in the subject, has not hesitated to state that "it can admit of no doubt."¹ Some other derivations, not necessary to be mentioned, have been proposed: and lastly that which, as it appears to me, cardinal Bona has completely established as the true one; that it is a liturgical Latin word, a mittendo; and derived from the usual form by which, first the catechumens and others were dismissed, and secondly is it to be wished that some one really learned would give us a work which the above scarcely makes more than a pretence to be. By far the best at present is the Chronology of history, by Sir H. Nicolas.

the faithful at the conclusion of the service: "Ite, missa est."

For further information I shall refer the reader to the following authorities, all of whom treat fully upon the matter and in fact exhaust it: Baronius, ann. 34; Bellarmine, de missa, lib. v. cap. 1; Bona, Opera, tom. i. lib. i. cap. 1, and Sala's additions to his text; Casalius, de Christian. rit. cap. 9; Cas-sander, Liturgica, cap. 26 (Opera, p. 55); Durant, de ritibus, lib. ii. cap. 1; van Espen, tom. i. p. 410; Ducange, Glossarium; and Gavantus, Thesaurus, tom. i. p. 7. These are works which are more easily to be obtained than are the older ritualists, Micrologus, Alcuin, Isidore, Hugo Victorinus, &c., who agree with them. From a careful examination of these as well as of those who hold the contrary opinion we may reasonably conclude that the question has been settled, and that Missa is derived "a mittendo" and from the "Ite, missa est."

II. The word "Missa" especially in the most ancient writers, and in ecclesiastical documents such as monastic statutes and decrees of councils, does not always signify "the Liturgy" or "Office of the Holy Communion." It means sometimes the dismissal from any divine office; sometimes the portion of the service at which catechumens were present; sometimes again that to which only the faithful had been admitted: also, as I have had occasion to remark before,² it sometimes means collects or lections, or even the canonical hours, and in later ages the feast-day, as our own Christ-mas and Michael-mas. I again refer the student to the authors before named, particularly Bona and Ducange. There is usually little difficulty in determining whether the term is to be taken in its strict and more usual or in its improper sense; and instances are not very abundant of its use, even in early writers, in other than its true meaning as applied to the liturgy.

III. As "Missa" is to be understood sometimes as other than the liturgy, so the liturgy had other names than missa. Such, among the Greeks, were mystagogia, synaxis, telete, anaphora, and prospora: and among the Latins collecta, dominicum, agenda, communio, and oblatio.

IV. The chief kinds of masses were (1) Missa solemnis; or, that which was celebrated with the full attendance of the priest and his ministers, deacon, sub-deacon, and acolytes, with the proper solemnities of incensing, &c., and in short all the ceremonies which the full rubrics of the particular church appointed. Under this head were included the missa pontificalia, episcopalis, and abbatialis; when a bishop or mitred abbot officiated pontificaliter.

(2) Missa alta; or, at it is now commonly called in England, high mass. This is the same as the missa solemnis; and appears to have been a term chiefly in use in this country. We find it as early, at least, as the year 1356 when John Grandison, bishop of Exeter, ordered a procession and special prayers for the king and prince of Wales: "et deinde altam missam, sicut in die sanctæ trinitatis solenniter cum sequenti celebrare."³ And, again,

³ Concilia, tom. 3., p. 37. A few years afterwards a mandate of his successor, bishop Brentingham, was directed against intruding priests, who would say low masses in parish churches on sundays and holidays, which parishioners attended instead of the parochial mass; the "magna missa" as it was also commonly called. One consequence of this was that the people lost the benefit of hearing the accustomed sermon.

nearly two hundred years later, in 1528, there is a canon of the diocese of Ely: "quod clerici parochiales omnes et singuli per totam diœcesim tempore altæ missæ sacerdotibus deserviant reverenter et obedienter in superpelliceis," &c.⁴ Gavantus and Ducange cite only from a charter of 1377 in Rymer's Fœdera: "usque summum altare ad altam missam celebrandam accesseram."⁵ But the term (and also missa magna) occurs not unfrequently in the York and Sarum missals.

(3) Missæ publica: at which persons of either sex were permitted to attend: and was so called from that circumstance and not from the place where it was celebrated, "quia olim" (says Gavantus) "in cryptis et abditis locis celebrabatur." These masses were forbidden in some monasteries for obvious reasons. The missa communis seems to have been the same as the publica.

(4) Missæ privata was celebrated by the priest with only one attendant, and is that which is now commonly called in England low mass; or missa bassa, or plana; that is, as distinguished from missa alta, or solemnis: but as opposed to the missa publica it would seem to mean that at which, whether the people were present or not, the priest alone communicated. The missa privata must not be confounded with the missa solitaria; which last, although for a time it was not uncommon in monasteries, was at length altogether forbidden; and was that in which a priest consecrated and performed the divine service not only privately but without any attendant minister or other person present.

a council of York, A.D. 1195, it was decreed, "Cum inter cætera ecclesiæ sacramenta hostia salutaris præemineat, tanto impensior circa eam debet existere devotio sacerdotum, ut cum humilitate conficiatur, cum timore sumatur, cum reverentia dispensetur: . . . nec sine ministro literato celebretur."⁶ Some centuries earlier there are two remarkable decisions upon this point in the Anglo-saxon ecclesiastical institutes; which would appear to prove that in those days one minister alone present was not sufficient: "At such times when ye attend the gemot of bishops, have . . . II priests or III or as many laymen called, that they may reverently celebrate the holy mystery with you." Almost immediately after follows: "Mass-priests shall not on any account celebrate mass alone without other men [butan oðpum mannum] that he may know whom he addresses, and who responds to him. He shall address those standing about him, and they shall respond to him. He shall bear in mind the Lord's saying, which he said in his gospel. He said: 'there, where two or three men shall be gathered in my name, there will I be in the midst of them.'"⁷

(5) Of the same kind as the missa privata were the missa familiaris and peculiaris,⁸ the specialis and singularis.

⁸ There is a constitution of John Peckham, "Sacerdotes caveant universi ne missarum pe-culiarium seu familiare se celebrationi obligent, quo minus valeant canonico officio commissam sibi officiare ecclesiam, ut tenentur." And see Lyndwood's gloss. lib. iij. tit. 23, De celeb. miss. Sacerdotes caveant. One extract may be made: "Verb. canonico officio, i.e. missa de die, quæ non debet omitti propter alias, ut prædictum est.

(6) The Missa votiva strictly meant a mass which the priest said at his own option; not agreeing with the office appointed for the day. This, of course, was subject to certain rules. But in a wider sense, those were called votive masses which by a statute of the Church were fixed to be said at certain times; and they were so called with respect to the Church herself, by whose devotion they had been so prescribed. Such was the "Missa pro defunctis" which was to be said upon the second day of November.

(7) The Missa præsanctificationum was a species of imperfect service, in which no consecration was made, and the priest communicated of the oblation which had been consecrated upon a previous day. In the Greek Church during lent these masses only are allowed, except upon Saturdays and Sundays, and the feast of the annunciation; in the Roman catholic church it is limited to Good Friday.

The thirty-sixth of the canons of Ælfric, in 957, as translated from the Anglo-saxon by Thorpe, shows us the antiquity of the Good Friday service as observed in England a thousand years ago: "Housel may not be hallowed on Good Friday [lānga Fpize-dæg, long Friday] because Christ suffered on that day for us: but there must nevertheless be done what appertains to that day: so that two lectures be read, with two expositions,⁹ and with two collects, and Christ's passion; and, afterwards, the prayers. And let them pray to the holy rood, so that they all greet the rood of God with kiss. Let the priest then go to the altar of God, with the housel bread that he hallowed on Thursday,

canonico officio, ac si per hoc innuat, quod missa sit de officiis canonicis, non tamen de horis and with unhallowed wine mixed with water, and conceal it with his corporal, and then immediately say, 'Oremus; præceptis salutaribus moniti' and 'Pater noster' to the end. And then let him say to himself, 'Libera nos quæso Domine ab omnibus malis,' and aloud 'per omnia sæcula sæculorum.' Let him then put a part of the housel into the chalice, then let him go silently to the housel; and, for the rest, let look who will."¹⁰ The prayers and collects referred to are those which have been especially said on Good Friday for various conditions of men from a very remote age. Lanfranc speaks of them in his constitutions: and that as now "pro cunctis ordinibus flectantur genua, nisi pro Judæis."¹¹

(8) With this last mass the Missa sicca has been often confounded; but there is an essential distinction: because the missa sicca was not only without consecration but without communion; a mere recitation of part only of the service. Long before the sixteenth century it would seem to have been abolished. Durand's account of it is: "Potest sacerdos accepta stola epistolam et evangelium legere, et dicere orationem dominicam, et dare benedictionem; quinimo si ex devotione, non ex superstitione velit totum officium missæ sine sacrificio dicere, accipiat omnes vestes sacerdotales, et missam suo ordine celebret, usque ad finem offerendæ, dimittens secreta, quæ ad sacrificium pertinent. Præfationem vero dicere potest, licet in eadem videantur et adorata cruce, communicent omnes."

angeli invocari ad consecrationem corporis et sanguinis Christi. De canone vero nihil dicat, sed orationem dominicam non prætermittat, et quæ ibi sequuntur sub silentio dicenda non dicat: calicem et hostiam non habeat: nec de his, quæ super calicem seu eucharistiam dicuntur, vel fiunt, aliquid dicat, vel faciat. Potest etiam dicere ‘Pax Domini sit semper,’ &c., et exinde missæ officium suo ordine peragat.”¹²

There is some doubt after all, although Durand speaks thus decidedly, whether the missa sicca was at any time permitted in the western Church. Quarti and Merati think that it was so: but against these are even greater ritualists, among whom are cardinal Bona and Benedict XIV. But there is evidence certainly that another, the same in fact, namely the missa nautica or navalis, was at one time allowed “tempore navigationis, quando scilicet ob periculum effusionis non licebat celebrare.” Such an office perhaps might be more reasonably excused at sea: and it may not be out of place to give the rubric which refers to it, from an ordo missæ printed at Rome in 1511:—

“In loco fluctuanti, ut in mari et fluminibus, celebrare non licet alicui. Consuevit tamen in mari, pro populorum devotione, absque consecratione missa (quam siccam vocant) dici per sacerdotem hoc ordine. Besides the above there are other kinds of masses, the names of which may be found and a full explanation of them in Gavantus, Bona, and other writers. I have very briefly noticed the chief differences, and those which relate to the Church of England before the sixteenth century.

V. I shall not make any attempt at a short account of the various vestments which the priest wore in celebrating the divine mysteries. A good arrangement which without repetition would give us the sum of the information which is dispersed in very numerous volumes is still [1846] to be desired;¹⁴ but for this I have not space. I shall therefore now state the names only, in the order in which they were to be put on. 1. The amice. 2. The alb. 3. The girdle. 4. The maniple. 5. The stole. 6. The chasuble. The result of much enquiry about these as well as other ecclesiastical vestments is to be found in (without mentioning rarer works) Gavantus, cardinal Bona, Durand, Sausajus, Durant, and Ducange.

during the last forty years, both in England and abroad, upon ecclesiastical vestments and the furniture of the altar.

There is not enough in the old rubrics to enable us to decide where the priest in parish churches put on his vestments. The orders in the consuetudinaries usually have reference only to the practice in cathedral or abbatial churches. We may not improperly, however, conclude that priests vested in the sacristy, where there was a sacristy or vestry attached to the church. But it might be and perhaps often that parish churches, and especially in country places, had no sacristy. In such cases the priest by special leave might take his vestments from the altar and vest before it. If he had no such licence he would probably take them from the chest in which his vestments were kept and on which we may suppose they were laid ready. Such chests are frequently named in old inventories and other mediæval documents. Canon Simmons interprets the first and last rubrics of the Hereford use¹⁵ to mean that the priest certainly vested at the altar. They do not seem to me to decide the question either way; but, rather, to my mind, against the practice.¹⁶ To add one word more; it appears clear that in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries a common custom was that the priest (whether or not he vested before the altar) should vest in the sanctuary. In the treatise Of the manner and mode of the mass we read thus:—

“Whon that thou comest the chirche with-inne
 And thou sest the prest bigynne, Take his vestimens on,
 Loke thou do as I sey the,
 Knele a-doun vppon thi kne, Noyse that thou make non.”¹⁷

mass book, p. 163.

¹⁷ From the Vernon manuscript in the Bodleian, fol. 302; printed by canon Simmons, p. 128.

The following rubric is taken from the manuscript pontifical of the diocese of Exeter, of which an account is given elsewhere in the dissertation on service books.¹⁸—

“fol. 1. Modus induendi episcopum ad solemniter celebrandum. Primo veniat pontifex ante altare, vel alibi ubi dispositum fuerit, et prostratus breviter oret, et surgens ponat se ad cathedram et statim incipiantur psalmi consueti: ‘Quam dilecta:’ cum cæteris, ut supra. Interim ministri vel domicelli caligas cum sandalis secrete extenso superiori indumento ei subministret. Deinde manutergium cum aqua ad lavandum deportent. Postea exuat cappam et induat amictum, albam, et stolam, et reliquias circa collum, ac deinceps tunicam, dehinc dalmaticam et manipulum. Et tunc sedendo chirothecas manibus imponat, et annulum pontificalem magnum, una cum uno parvo strictiori annulo ad tenendum fortius super imponat. Et sudarium retortum in manu recipiat ad faciem extergendam. Et sic sedendo post psalmos infra scriptos orationes sequentes consuetas perdicat. Et cum hora fuerit, surgat et casulam induat, et mitram capiti imponat, et baculum pastorem in manu sua sinistra assumat, curvatura baculi ad populum conversa, cujus contrarium faciant ministri tenendo baculum vel portando. Et sic choro cantando ‘Gloria Patri’ procedat de sacrario ad altare populum benedicendo.”

The psalms and the prayers above mentioned follow on the reverse of the same folio. I have printed them below from the Sarum pontifical, together with the “Modus induendi episcopum” at full length from the same manuscript. The reader will see that it agrees exactly with the order in the pontifical of bishop Lacy.

There is one point in the above, valuable as it all is, especially worthy of notice; viz. that the maniple is directed to be put on before the chasuble: whereas the Roman pontifical, and with two exceptions all the pontificals which Georgius (the most learned writer on that subject) had examined, direct bishops, when they officiate, to be vested with the maniple last of all. And, indeed, this Exeter pontifical expressly remarks the distinction. "Et sciendum quod" (it says in the rubric before the prayers) "secundum usum curiæ Romanæ, ultimo omnium datur et ponitur in veniendo ad altare manipulus in brachio sinistro, et post missam primo amoveatur juxta illud: Venientes autem venient cum exultatione, portantes manipulos suos." The remark of Georgius is, "præterea manipulum celebraturi pontifices sumebant post cætera sacra indumenta, . . . sed in pontificali tantum Prudentii Trecensis imponitur post stolam, et in sacramentario Moysacensis monasterii annorum 800 post zonam. Alias liturgiæ antiquæ omnes statuunt, manipulum sumendum post reliqua sacerdotalia indumenta,"¹⁹ &c. Cardinal Bona says that anciently all priests, and not bishops only, received the maniple last of the vestments;²⁰ and this was rendered necessary by the peculiar shape of the chasuble.²¹ episcopal vestments.

See also Amalarius, lib. ii. cap. 5, "De introitu episcopi ad missam." But Rabanus Maurus speaks of it as a priestly vestment, in its modern order; De instit. clericorum, cap. 18.

when persecutions raged, and in some after-times of like dangers and necessity, the holy eucharist was celebrated not only in secret places but at any hour either of the day or night, when the malice of the enemy might the more probably be escaped. Of these night-assemblies for the purpose of communion the missa in nocte nativitatis Domini is the last remnant.

The rubric in the note below²² states the present order of the Roman catholic church :²³ and I shall cite some few authorities upon the ancient custom of the church of England before the sixteenth century.

The first from a constitution of archbishop Raynold published in the council of Oxford, A.D. 1322 : " Nullus insuper sacerdos parochialis præsumat missam celebrare, antequam matutinale persolverit officium, et primam et tertiam de die."²⁴ Lyndwood in his gloss upon this says that the matutinale officium includes " totum illud, quod continetur in nocturnis et in laudibus ;" and that although this canon is especially directed towards parish priests, yet that every priest is bound to say at least matins before he presumes to celebrate. There are

" Missa autem conventualis et solemnns sequenti ordine dici debet. In festis duplicibus, et semiduplicibus, in dominicis, et infra octavas, dicta in choro hora tertia. In festis simplicibus, et in feriis per annum, dicta sexta. In adventu, quadragesima, quatuor temporibus, etiam infra octavam pentecostes, et vigiliis quæ jejunantur, quavis sint dies solemnes, missa de tempore debet cantari post nonam.

other canons which respect parochial masses, and these equally insist upon the third hour also being previously said: because, says Lyndwood, about the third hour our blessed Lord was crucified, and the Holy Ghost descended upon the apostles. In considering these and similar constitutions, the reader must remember that the missa parochialis was not necessarily a missa solemnis: but that if it was "sine cantu" it would be of the nature of a low mass, and therefore not limited by the same strict rules as were the services of greater solemnity.²⁵

In the synod of Norwich, A.D. 1257, it was ordered "quod nullus sacerdos celebret, quousque prima canonice sit completa."²⁶ And again, by the constitutions of Cantilupe bishop of Worcester, A.D. 1240, to the same effect; but on account of the reason which is given I shall quote the canon at length: "Et quia, sicut accepimus, quidam capellani, ad annualia vel ad officium beatae virginis assumpti, interdum matutinis præpositis, aut seorsum, a choro vel ab ecclesia, per se dictis, missas celebrant immature, per campos vel per villas postmodum discurrentes: præcipimus, ut omnes capellani, qui in una parochia commorantur, simul intersint et convenient matutinis et vespers, et aliis horis ca-

²⁵ We must not forget however that the third hour admitted of some considerable variation from that which naturally and strictly was the corresponding hour of the day. Hence, we find it laid down by van Espen: "Insuper ut populus ad missam parochialem frequentandam incitetur, decretum est, ut parochi statuta eaque populo commodiori hora missam parochialem diebus præsertim dominicis et festis celebrent." Jus eccles. pars ii. sect. i. tit. v. And he goes on to cite councils which forbid the fixed hour to be put off or hastened for the sake of rich neighbours; and others, directing that bells should be rung to call the people together.

nonicis, in ecclesiis celebrandis, et missis : et maxime de die, nisi causa rationabili fuerint impediti : nec aliquis celebret, quousque prima fuerit canonice completa."²⁷

There seems no necessity upon this point to add many examples ; and we need therefore only refer to two more from monastic statutes. The one, of the hospital of Elsing Spital, London : this relates also to the time before which mass should end ; "circa horam tertiam cujuslibet diei pulsatis primitus campanis, . . . missam de die, prout diei solemnitas requirit, decantent ; ita quod hujusmodi missa singulis diebus circiter horam nonam finiatur."²⁸ The other, from the rule of the hospital of St. John baptist at Nottingham : "insuper statuimus, ut omnes fratres simul surgant ad matutinas, . . . cantatisque consequenter prima et tertia, celebretur missa."²⁹

It has been held from very early times that the holy eucharist should not be celebrated unless the office of one of the hours had been previously recited ; whether of tierce, sext, or the ninth hour. So that Lyndwood says : "potest colligi, quod in festo natalis Domini celebraturus primam missam, quæ solet cantari ante laudes, debet prius perficere matutinas et primam."³⁰ With whom agrees a more modern ritualist : "missa sollemnis semper dicitur post aliquam horam, etiam in nocte nativitatis Domini : ut horæ canonicæ sint quasi quædam ad missam præparatio."³¹

VII. There can be no doubt that in the first beginnings of the Christian Church the holy eucharist was offered not only in such places but at such times and opportunities as would be the most likely, in periods of violent persecution, to escape observation; and therefore, chiefly taking care as St. Austin tells us not to omit celebration if possible upon the Lord's day, it was subject occasionally to longer intervals than were permitted afterwards. Long before, however, the date of the council of Nice the practice of priests consecrating daily became common in most churches.³² St. Cyprian's testimony is sufficient upon this point, who says, "episcopatus nostri honor grandis et gloria est pacem dedisse martyribus, ut sacerdotes, qui sacrificia Dei quotidie celebramus, hostias Deo et victimas præparemus."³³

This custom was not likely for many reasons to become, as time went on, less observed: and it is recorded of Alcuin that, at the request of archbishop Boniface, he drew up services for each day

To here matyns of the day,
And the masse after."

Passus quintus.

So the "parson" says in the dialogue between him and the ploughman: a blasphemous publication by one of the extreme reformers in the early years of Edward the sixth. The parson is explaining the service for Corpus Christi day:—

"But nowe if thou wilt marke me welle,
From begynning to endynge
I wyl the tell,
Of the godly seruice that shall be to-morrowe.

We shal firste haue matins, is it not a godly hereynge?"

³² We may well believe that in the early days of the apostles no opportunity was lost of receiving the consecrated elements: when "the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul," they continued "daily breaking bread from house to house." But the persecutions had not begun.

in the week; which might be used when otherwise the days would have been vacant, or have had no proper office. Or again, as Micrologus says: "et hoc ideo, ut presbyteri illius temporis nuper ad fidem conversi, nondum ecclesiasticis officiis instructi, nondum etiam librorum copia præditi, vel aliquid haberent, cum quo officium suum qualibet die possent explere."³⁴ And in the very ancient manuscript which Illyricus edited the priest after the communion is directed to say this prayer: "Obsecro etiam te piissime omnium auxiliator, ne ad damnationem æternam mihi proveniat, quod quotidie cum conscientia polluta . . . corpus Christi Filii tui et sanguinem indignus audeo accipere." But before the tenth century more than one canon of councils are to be found, not exactly directing so much as strongly exhorting all priests to celebrate daily.³⁵ I shall not however add other testimonies upon this point except one of Bede, cited by Gabriel Biel;³⁶ which, whatever difference of opinion there might be as to the weight of all his arguments, certainly declares the reason on which in his day the necessity of this practice was supposed to rest: "Sacerdos non legitime impeditus celebrare omittens, quantum in ipso est, privat sanctissimam Trinitatem laude et gloria, angelos lætitia, peccatores venia, justos subsidio et gratia, in purgatorio existentes refrigerio, ecclesiam speciali Christi beneficio, et seipsum medicina et remedio."

There is no proof that in the old Church of England the practice of daily consecrating the holy eucharist or of the daily communion of the clergy was enforced by any council or rested upon other obligation than individual piety or the statutes of some deceased benefactor. In the council of Cloveshoo, A.D. 747, it was decreed, canon 14, "Ut dominicus dies legitima veneratione a cunctis celebratur, sitque divino tantum cultui dedicatus, omnes abbates ac presbyteri isto sacratissimo die in suis monasteriis atque ecclesiis maneat, missarumque solennia agant." And the end of the same canon extends the like obligation, in nearly as strong terms, to the people: "Hoc quoque decernitur, quod eo die sive per alias festivitates majores, populus per sacerdotes Dei ad ecclesiam sæpius invitatus, ad audiendum verbum Dei conveniat: missarumque sacramentis ac doctrinæ sermonibus frequentius adsit."³⁷

More than five hundred years after we find no other order than the following: I quote from Lyndwood, on account of his gloss upon it: "Statuimus insuper, ut quilibet sacerdos, quem canonica necessitas non excusat, conficiat omni hebdomada, saltem semel."³⁸

Upon the canonica necessitas Lyndwood observes that an impediment would exist if the priest were suspended, or excommunicate, or in mortal sin; or, if he could not obtain access to a consecrated place: "nam in loco non sacrato, non est celebrandum sine licentia episcopi." Or, if he has not the sacred vestments: or even "quia non habet stolam et manipulum." Or, if he has not an assistant: "et breviter, in omni casu ubi non potest habere requisita ad missæ celebrationem, et confectionem eucharistiæ, præsertim ea quæ sunt de materia hujus sacramenti." Upon the words saltem semel his gloss is, "et hoc fiat die dominica, si fieri poterit, juxta illud Aug. 'Quotidie eucharisticam communionem accipere nec laudo, nec vitupero: omnibus tamen dominicis diebus ad communicandum hortor.' Et ista constitutio facta est ad invitandum presbyteros frequentius celebrare, qui forsitan vix quater in anno consueverunt celebrare."³⁹

VIII. The great stress which was laid for some centuries upon the propriety of every priest celebrating the holy Service once every day led for many reasons, which will naturally occur to the reader, to a great abuse. Priests consecrated more than once, and indeed many times, upon the same day. This in some instances was the result only of a mistaken piety and devotion unmixed with any baser motive. Walafrid Strabo records that pope Leo the third sometimes celebrated nine times in one day: "Fidelium relatione virorum in nostram usque pervenit notitiam, Leonem papam (sicut ipse fatebatur) una die vij. vel ix. missarum solennia sæpius celebrasse."⁴⁰

But measures were very early taken in England to check (at least) the excess into which this practice,

4, Unusquisque, sicut accepit gratiam, alterutrum illam administret, &c. Sacerdos enim tenetur Deo sacrificium reddere, licet nulli homini teneatur. Sacerdotibus enim præceptum est, Hoc facite in meam commemorationem."

⁴⁰ De rebus eccles. cap. 21. But it has been said that this was owing to the multitude whom he was desirous to communicate, and for all of whom he wished himself to celebrate. See Fleury, hist. eccl. tom. x. p. 158.

so very objectionable, was likely to extend. The fifty-fifth of the excerpts of archbishop Egbert in the eighth century declares: "et sufficit sacerdoti unam missam in una die celebrare, quia Christus semel passus est, et totum mundum redemit."⁴¹ The thirty-seventh of the canons enacted under king Edgar enjoins "that no priest, on one day, celebrate mass oftener than thrice, at the very utmost."⁴² The eighteenth of the laws of the Northumbrian priests is to the same purpose: "If a priest in one day celebrate mass oftener than thrice, let him pay xij ores."⁴³ In almost the same words as in Egbert's excerpts Ælfric speaks in his pastoral epistle: "it is much that mass may be celebrated once in one day, though it be not celebrated oftener."⁴⁴ These bring us nearly to the period of the Norman conquest, up to which time we find no more than repeated attempts to check (as I have said) the evil which existed: but soon after that event there were very frequent orders, and more determinate, made in the provincial and diocesan synods. Take the second canon of the council of London, A.D. 1200: "Non liceat presbytero bis in die celebrare, nisi necessitate urgente; et tunc idem cum in die bis celebrat, post primam celebrationem et sanguinis sumptionem nil infundatur calici."⁴⁵ These cases of necessity seem explained more fully, a few years later, in a provincial constitution of archbishop Langton: "Bis in die celebrare nullus præsumat, nisi in diebus nativitatis et resurrectionis dominicæ: et quando corpus in propria ecclesia fuerit tumulandum: et tunc in prima missa ablutio digitorum vel calicis a celebrante non sumatur.”⁴⁶ The council of Durham, A.D. 1220, makes a like order, “ne quis celebret bis in die:” with the same exceptions, or if “aliqua evidens urgeat necessitas.” So also the council of Oxford about the same time; and some synodal constitutions (of an uncertain diocese) A.D. 1237.⁴⁷ In the year 1230 one of the articles of enquiry for the archdeacons of the diocese of Lincoln asks: “An aliquis sacerdos bis celebret in die, nisi in casibus concessis, et in propria persona in propria ecclesia?”⁴⁸ And to quote no others, we find the same order in some of the last injunctions published in England: “Item, that no prest say two masses in one day, except Chrystmas day, without express licens.”⁴⁹ Gavantus or rather Merati in his additions states that the first order to the effect of the above canons was made by pope Alexander the second, A.D. 1070. The words used by archbishop Egbert and by Ælfric, already cited, are those which are in the decree of Gratian.⁵⁰

The injunctions added to the canons which have just been mentioned, that the ablution should not be taken in the first mass if, for any lawful cause, the priest was about to celebrate again, were in consequence of the strict rule laid down that none should consecrate or communicate except fasting;⁵¹

unam missam dignam celebrare potuit.” De consecrat. distinct. i. can. 53.

⁵¹ Walafrid Strabo, cap. xix, allows that anciently there was no rule to this effect: “sed a sequentibus honesta et rationabili deliberatione statutum esse cognoscitur; ut omni tempore a jejunis, sacrosancta celebrentur mysteria.” De rebus eccle-

which fast would not be broken by the communion of the consecrated chalice, although of course by the subsequent ablution. Hence on the day of the nativity when priests might lawfully consecrate three times, the ablution was ordered to be taken only at the third and last mass. And to such an exactness was this to be observed, that if by mistake or accident the priest should have taken the ablution at the first of these, he was not then allowed to perform the other two.⁵² Lyndwood says: "Ratio est, quia si faceret, non esset jejunos, et celebratio missæ debet fieri jejuno stomacho." Again, no priest might under any necessity consecrate⁵³ upon good Friday: his fast moreover would be broken by the unconsecrated wine which he must take with the reserved host. In this case the exception of two parishes or large populations (which I shall speak of presently) would not hold, because there was no obligation upon the people to attend the service on good Friday.⁵⁴

The constitution above, of archbishop Langton, allows not only an exception upon the day of the nativity but of the resurrection. Lyndwood says, siasticis. Pope Benedict however denies this: "Nemo nescius est sanctos apostolos tunc jejunos non fuisse, cum eucharistiam acceperunt, tamen ob tanti sacramenti reverentiam ab apostolicis usque temporibus statutum fuit semperque in ecclesia observatum, ne quisquam nisi jejunos eucharistiam sumeret." Opera, tom. ix. p. 328. But the pope does not (the canon excepted) support his dictum with any authorities. See Bingham, book xv. cap. vij; and, especially,

Fell's note upon St. Cyprian, epist. lxij. p. 156.

⁵² Thom. iii. par. quæst. 80. art. 8.

⁵³ By an oversight this was misprinted in the second edition "consecrate twice." Evident as it was from the context that it was a mere misprint, an over-eager controversialist thought it worth his while to draw particular attention to the statement as if it arose from ignorance.

"Resurrectionis dominicæ: i.e. in die paschæ: de isto die, quod in eo possit bis celebrari, non invenio textum alicujus juris vel canonis. Sed istud ideo fortassis hic ordinatur, quia contingit sæpius, quod in una magna parochia non est nisi unus presbyter, qui commode illo die non posset in missa solenniori de die omnes parochianos suos communicare, et oportet quod servientes illo die ministrent et præparent ea quæ ad ipsorum servitia spectant erga adventum dominorum suorum et magistrorum: unde tales communicari possunt et debent in prima missa."⁵⁵ There are nevertheless some examples, which may be seen in Bona,⁵⁶ of two celebrations with their full and different services upon easter day: and it is possible that in the twelfth century some remains of the old custom were still left in England, and not intended to be forbidden in the archbishop's constitution.

But the gloss of Lyndwood at any rate teaches us what was the practice of his own time: and that upon easter day equally with all other days, excepting always of the nativity, one mass only was to be celebrated by the same priest. For the exception which he allows, and supposes in the archbishop's constitution to be intended, does not seem to meet the case; because not only upon Easter day, but on other great festivals, the bishop could always give licence to a parish priest who had large populations under his charge to celebrate for their convenience, and to meet the necessities of their case, more than once. The same was permitted if he had two parishes under him.⁵⁷

The cases of necessity which are spoken of in the canons, as exceptions, are agreed generally to have been, lest a sick man should die without the viaticum and there was no host consecrated : if a bishop or prince should arrive at a place after the service was over : if a person was to be buried ; but this, in places only where it was always the custom not to bury except with the celebration of the holy eucharist. Lyndwood, in the same place before cited, says that in all excepted cases they availed only if no other priest happened to be at hand ; and that, upon any account whatsoever, it was not permitted to celebrate more than twice : “ quod in nullo casuum prædictorum licet ultra duas missas celebrare, excepto die nativitatis Domini.”

The day of the nativity having been so often mentioned, as the only exception, I cannot think it will be out of place to add Lyndwood's reasons why three services were not only permitted but ordered for that day : he does not offer them as his own, but from earlier canonists :—

“Significat prima missa tempus ante legem et ideo celebratur in tenebris. Secunda significat tempus sub lege, quo tempore incipiebat sciri Christus, sed non clare, et ideo celebratur inter diem et noctem. Tertia significat tempus gratiæ, et cantatur in plena luce, ad designandum Christum venisse, qui est lux vera, et illuminat omnem hominem venientem in hunc mundum. Vel dic, secundum *Jo. quia ex virgine: ideo celebratur in mane. Tertia significat generationem spiritualem, quæ fit per gratiam, et illa celebratur in tertia, quia clarescit secundum veritatem.”⁵⁸

IX. I shall conclude this with some observations upon the Cautelæ missæ, or, as they were commonly called, “The cautells of the mass.”

Scarcely was the conversion of the Anglo-saxons begun and Christian missionaries for a second time sent into England, before the same care was insisted upon to be observed by all the priests of the English Church in the celebration of the divine mysteries, which was enforced as much as possible in other parts of the world. Some persons who have not catholic faith may probably think that these precautions were carried into excess. But it would be idle uncharitableness to deny that they sprang solely from a pious and right regard towards the great sacrament of the gospel: and in such a matter, concerning the highest mysteries, concerning that bread and wine, that Body and Blood, every one will allow that it is difficult to say where reverence

I may add that two communions were provided for by the first common Prayer book of king Edward the sixth, and a proper introit, collect, epistle, and gospel appointed for each. Why the third office was not added I am ignorant. But at the next review, in 1552, only one communion office was allowed on Christmas-day.

There is a curious entry in some churchwardens' accounts for the parish of St. Helen, at Abingdon, which is not easy to explain, except by supposing that in some places the old custom was still (though illegally) kept up so late even as the third year of queen Elizabeth: “Payde for four pounde of candilles upon Christmas-day in the morning for the masse, os. 12d.” Archæologia, vol. i. p. 15. We know from the same accounts that the new “communion boke” of 1559 had been bought two years before.

ceases to be within the bounds of a due moderation ; but not so difficult to say where irreverence begins.⁵⁹

I shall take first some extracts from the penitential of archbishop Théodore. His thirty-ninth chapter is "de negligentia eucharistiæ," and to each offence or accident a certain penalty is attached, proportioned to the greatness at which it was then esteemed : "Si quis eucharistiam negligentia causa perdiderit. . . . Si sacrificium in terra ceciderit, causa negligentia. . . . Qui non bene custodierit sacrificium. . . . Qui autem perdiderit, et non inventum fuerit. . . . Qui neglexerit sacrificium, ut vermes in eo sint, aut colorem non habeat saporemque. . . . Si ceciderit sacrificium de manibus offerentis terra tenus, et non inveniatur, omne quodcunque inventum fuerit in loco quo ceciderit comburatur igni, et cinis ejus sub altare abscondatur. Si vero inventum fuerit sacrificium, locus scopamundetur, et stramen igni comburatur, cinisque, ut supra dictum est, abscondatur. . . . Si de calice per negligentiam aliquid stillaverit in terra, lingua lam-nothing but abuse and foul language. It is a remarkable example of the extent to which the liberty of what was in those days called religious controversy was allowed to go. Coarse and disgraceful as were some of the writings of the English reformers in king Edward's time—for example, those of bishop Bale—they fall far short of this. I know nothing which can be compared with it except some of the tracts of the later puritans in Elizabeth's reign, against the bishops of the reformed English church. Happily, the book of M. Peter Viret is extremely rare.

⁵⁹ About the middle of the sixteenth century a Genevan puritan, named Peter Viret, wrote in French a book of considerable length, in which he translated the ordinary and canon of the mass, with "certainne annotations." An English translation dedicated to Lord Burleigh was published in 1584. At the beginning the writer examines and discusses the "cawtelles;" and probably there is no publication of the sixteenth century which exceeds this in violence and blasphemy. There is little argument, or rather none, in the book from beginning to end ;

batur, terraque radatur. . . . Si super altare stillaverit calix, sorbeat minister stillam," &c. . . .⁶⁰ Other orders to the same effect may be found in the same archbishop's capitula.⁶¹

In the next century archbishop Egbert of York, in his confessional, appoints a penance, "si sacerdos calicem effundat postquam missam cantaverit."⁶² In his penitential we find several canons to the same effect: "Si quis ex incuria sua eucharistiam perdidit. . . . Si sacrificium ex incuria in terram ceciderit. . . . Si quis neglexerit consecratam eucharistiam, ita ut nimis diu servata sordes in ea sit, vel colorem suum non habeat. . . . Omne sacrificium quod sordidum est, vel vetustate corruptum, comburatur. . . . Qui effuderit calicem suum inter missam suam," &c.⁶³

We will pass on to the canons of Ælfric. "The priest shall purely and carefully do God's ministries (Godes þenunga) with clean hands and with clean heart; and let him see that his oblations be not old baken, nor ill seen to. . . . Great honours they merit who minister to God with zeal and devotion: and also it is written, that he is accursed who doth God's ministry with carelessness. We may by this know, that a man who has not his sight should not dare to celebrate mass, when he sees not what he offers to God, whether it be clean or foul."⁶⁴ Archbishop Lanfranc in his statutes has one chapter, "de negligentia circa corpus Domini."⁶⁵ But, lastly, to come down nearer to the date of the cautels themselves, a canon of the constitutions of W. de Kirkham bishop of Durham in the thirteenth century orders: "ut si per negligentiam aliquid de sanguine Christi stillaverit super terram lambatur lingua; tabula radatur, super quam stillaverit: . . . si autem super altare: . . . si super linteum," &c.:⁶⁶ and to each of these a penalty is attached, for the carelessness owing to which it must have occurred.

We do not know by whom these "cautelæ missæ" were drawn up and arranged from the decrees of councils and the opinions of doctors and canonists, nor by whose authority they were introduced into the missal. Gavantus says that the earliest edition of the Roman use in which he had seen cautions of this kind was in that printed at Venice, 1557. They have since been always added to the Roman missal, but arranged differently from the cautelæ and headed "De defectibus circa missam occurrentibus." In the Hereford missal they are styled "De casibus et periculis quæ possunt evenire circa altare." These differ somewhat from the Sarum; but equally with those in the present Roman missal have the same object in view, and make very similar arrangements and rules. In the York missal, 4to. 1517 (which has been followed in the present volume), the "cautelæ ad missam celebrandam" are placed at the end of the book, and are exactly the same as those which I am now about to give from the Salisbury use. In this last (the Salisbury missal) they are to be found in almost all editions after 1500: sometimes in the beginning after the calendar, sometimes at the end of the book; and more commonly either before the ordinary or after the canon. I shall take them from an edition by Regnault, Paris, 1529.

II.

Cautelae Missae.

PRIMA cautela est: ut sacerdos missam celebraturus, conscientiam suam per puram confessionem optime præparet, sacramentum vehementer desideret, et confiteri intendat. Notulam de modo agendi officium memoriter et bene sciat. Gestus valde compositos ac devotos habeat. Cum enim quilibet teneatur Deum diligere ex toto corde, ex tota anima, et ex totis viribus suis. Hic Deum diligere non probatur, qui in mensa altaris ubi rex regum et dominus omnium tractatur et sumitur, irreligiosus, indevotus, impudicus, distractus, vagus, aut desidiosus apparuerit. Attendat igitur unusquisque quod ad mensam magnam sedeat. Cogitet qualiter eum præparari oporteat. Sit cautus et circumspectus. Stet erectus, non jacens in altari. Cubitos jungat lateribus. Manus exaltet, ut extremitates digitorum modicum super humeros videantur.

Intellectum signis et verbis coaptet, quoniam magna latent in signis, majora in verbis, maxima in intentione. Tres digitos jungat quibus signa faciat, reliquos duos in manu componat. Signa faciat directe non oblique, alte satis ne calicem evertat. Non circulos pro crucibus. Cum vero inclinandum erit, non oblique sed directe ante altare, toto curvatus corpore, se inclinet.

Secunda est, ut non putet, sed certo sciat se debitas materias habere, hoc est, panem triticeum, et vinum cum aqua modica. De vino et aqua sic poterit certificari. Exigat a ministro, ut gustet tam vinum quam aquam. Ipse autem presbyter gustare non debet. Guttam fundat in manum, digito terat et odoret, sic erit certior. Non credat ampullæ signatæ, non colori; quoniam sæpius fallunt. Videat calicem ne sit fractus. Consideret vinum; si est corruptum, nullo modo celebret: si acetosum, dissimulet. Si nimis aquosum, abstineat, nisi sciat vinum aquæ prævalere. Et in omni casu si contingat dubitari; vel propter acedinem, vel propter mixturam vel illimpiditatem utrum possit confici, consulimus abstinere: quia in hoc sacramento nihil sub dubio est agendum, ubi certissime est dicendum; Hoc est enim corpus meum, et, Hic est enim calix sanguinis mei. Item oblatas convenientes eligat, et vinum competenter infundat, quia hoc sacramentum debet sensibus deservire ad videndum, tangendum, et gustandum, ut sensus reficiatur ex specie, et intellectus ex re contenta foveatur. Aqua etiam in parvissima quantitate infundatur, ut a vino absorbeatur, et saporem vini recipiat. Non est enim periculum quantumcunque modicum apponatur de aqua, est autem periculum si multum. Apponitur etiam aqua solum ad significandum, sed una gutta tantum significat, quantum mille. Ideo caveat sacerdos ne cum impetu infundat, ne nimis cadat.

Tertia est, ut canonem morosius legat quam cætera. Et præcipue ab illo loco: Qui pridie quam pateretur accepit. Tunc enim respirans attendere debet, et se totum colligere (si prius non potuit) singulis verbis intendens. Et dum dixerit: Accipite et manducate ex hoc omnes; respiret et uno spiritu tractim dicat, Hoc est enim corpus meum: sic non immiscet se alia cogitatio. Non enim videtur esse rationabile discontinuare formam tam brevem, tam arduam, tam efficacem, cujus tota virtus dependet ab ultimo verbo, scilicet, meum, quod in persona Christi dicitur. Unde non debet cuilibet verbo punctus imponi. Cum id nulla ratione valeat ut dicatur: Hoc est enim, corpus meum. Sed totum simul proferat. Pari modo hoc idem in forma consecrationis sanguinis observetur.

Item proferendo verba consecrationis circa quamlibet materiam, sacerdos semper intendat conficere id quod Christus instituit, et ecclesia facit.

Quarta est, ut si plures hostias habet consecrare, debet harum unam elevare, quam sibi deputaverat a principio ad missam; et teneat illam penes alias, ita quod visum et intentionem ad omnes simul dirigat. Et signando et dicendo: Hoc est enim corpus meum: omnes cogitet quas demonstrat.

Quinta est, ut dum sumat, nunquam uno haustu calicem sumat, ne propter impetum tussis inopinate occurrat, sed bis vel ter caute sumat ut impedimentum non habeat. Si vero plures hostias debet sumere, ut quando hostia est renovanda, primo sumat eam quam confecit et sanguinem: post hæc alias quæ supersunt. Suam prius sumat quam alias, quia de suis credit et scit, de aliis credit et nescit. Demum desuper ablutiones, et non prius.

Sexta est, ut paucorum nominibus se astringat in canone; nec perpetuo, sed quamdiu velit faciat, quando velit omittat, quia canon de multitudine nominum prolixatur, et per hoc cogitatio distrahitur. Dignum tamen est ut pater, mater, frater, soror ibi nominentur. Et si qui pro tempore commendantur; et specialiter pro quibus missa celebratur. Non tamen ibi fiat vocalis expressio, sed mentalis.

Septima est, ut ante missam non os vel dentes lavet; sed tantum labia exterius ore clauso si indiget, ne forte aquæ gustum cum saliva immittat. Post missam etiam caveat excreationes quantum potest, donec comederit et biberit, ne forte aliquid inter dentes remanserit, aut in faucibus, quod excreando ejiceretur. Quamvis autem missa devotissime sit celebranda contemplationis causa, est tamen modus habendus, ne protractione vel acceleratione fiat homo notabilis. Nam acceleratio signum est incuriæ. Protractio est occasio detractiois. Sed medio tutissimus ibit. Eo autem affectu est quælibet missa habenda et dicenda a quocumque sacerdote, quasi prima dicatur et nunquam amplius sit dicenda: tam magnum enim donum, semper debet esse novum.

Habeat itaque sacerdos diligentiam ad conficiendum: reverentiam ad tangendum: et devotionem ad sumendum. Sic sentiendo et agendo digne tractabitur sacramentum, rite peragetur officium, atque pericula et scandala evitabuntur.

Item, in collectis dicendis semper impar numerus observetur. Una propter unitatem Deitatis. Tres propter trinitatem Personarum. Quinque propter quinque partitam passionem Christi. Septem, propter septiformem gratiam Spiritus sancti. Septenarium numerum excedere non licet.

Item, quodcumque oratio dirigitur solum ad Patrem, in fine dicatur. Per Dominum nostrum Jesum Christum. Si vero dirigitur ad Patrem et mentio fit Filii in ipsa, in fine dicatur. Per eundem Dominum nostrum Jesum Christum. Si autem oratio dirigitur solum ad Filium, in fine dicatur: Qui cum eodem Patre et Spiritu sancto. Et si mentio Spiritus sancti in quacumque oratione fiat, in fine dicatur; eiusdem Spiritus sancti Deus, per omnia sæcula sæculorum. Amen.

Primo quid sit agendum cum sacerdos deficit.

Si autem in canone deficiat, factis jam aliquibus signis, tamen ante transubstantiationem et consecrationem sacramenti, tunc alius sacerdos ab illo loco ubi ille dimisit, debet reincipere, et tantum illud supplere quod omisum est.

Si autem sacerdos in actu consecrationis deficiat, verbis aliquibus jam in parte prolatis, sed in toto non completis, secundum Innocentium, alius sacerdos debet incipere ab illo loco, Qui pridie.

Si tamen sacerdos deficiat consecrato corpore, sed non sanguine, alius sacerdos compleat consecrationem sanguinis, incipiens ab illo loco, Simili modo. Si consecrato corpore, percipiat vinum non esse in calice, debet hostia munde reponi in corporali, et calice rite præparato, incipiat ab illo loco, Simili modo.

Si ante consecrationem sanguinis, percipiat aquam non esse in calice, debet statim apponere, et conficere.

Si autem post consecrationem sanguinis, percipiat quod aqua desit in calice, debet nihilominus procedere, nec debet miscere aquam cum sanguine, quia pro parte sequeretur corruptio sacramenti: debet tamen sacerdos dolere et puniri.

vinum non fuerit positum, sed aqua tantum in calice, siquidem hoc percipit ante sumptionem corporis, debet aquam deponere et imponere vinum cum aqua, et resumere consecrationem sanguinis ab illo loco, Simili modo.

Si percipiat hoc post sumptionem corporis, debet apponere de novo aliam hostiam, iterum cum sanguine consecrandam, secundum doctores in sacra pagina, debet autem resumere verba consecrationis ab illo loco, Qui pridie. In fine autem iterum debet sumere hostiam illam ultimo consecratam, non obstante si prius sumpsit aquam et etiam illum sanguinem. Innocentius tamen dicit quod si ex prolongatione sacerdos timet scandalum, quo sufficiunt tantum illa verba per quæ consecratur sanguis, scilicet Simili modo, et sic sumere sanguinem.

Quid autem faciet cum aquam, sumpto corpore, jam habet in ore, et jam primo sentit quod sit aqua; utrum debeat eam deglutire vel emittere. Require in summa Hostiensis in titulo de celebr. missæ. Tutius tamen est eam deglutire quam emittere; et hoc ideo ne aliqua particula corporis cum aqua exeat.

Item si sacerdos post consecrationem recordetur se non esse jejunum, vel commisisse aliquod peccatum, vel esse excommunicatum: debet nihilominus procedere, cum proposito satisfaciendi, et absolutionem impetrandi.

Item si musca vel aranea vel aliquid talium ante consecrationem in calicem ceciderit, vel etiam venenum immissum foreprehenderit, vinum debet effundi quod est in calice, et abluto calice aliud vinum cum aqua poni ad consecrandum. Sed si aliquid horum post consecrationem acciderit, debet musca vel aranea vel aliquid talium caute capi, et diligenter inter digitos pluries lavari; et vermibus comburi; et ablutio cum cineribus combustis in sacrario reponi. Venenum autem nullo modo debet sumi, sed cum reliquiis debet sanguis talis cui venenum est immisum in vasculo mundo reservari. Et ne sacramentum maneat imperfectum, debet calicem denuo rite præparare, et resumere consecrationem sanguinis ab illo loco, Simili modo. Et nota quod secundum doctores, nihil abominabile sumi debet occasione hujus sacramenti.

Item si sacerdos non recolit se dixisse aliquid horum quæ debuit dicere, non debet mente turbari; non enim qui multa dicit, semper recolit quæ dixit. Etiam si sibi pro certo constat quod aliqua omiserit, si talia non sunt de necessitate sacramenti, sicut sunt secretæ, vel aliqua verba canonis, ultra procedat, nec aliquid resumat. Si tamen probabiliter sibi constat quod omisit aliquid, quod sit de necessitate sacramenti, sicut forma verborum per quam consecratur, omnia verba consecrationis super suam materiam resumere debet, quia consecratio facta non esset. Quod tamen non oportet si prætermissa esset conjunctio enim vel alia verba quæ præcedunt vel sequuntur formam; quæ non sunt de ipsius substantia.

Si autem sacerdos dubitaret an aliquid verbum pertinens ad substantiam formæ omisisset vel non, nullatenus debet servare formam conditionalem; sed sine temeraria assertionem formam totam super suam propriam materiam debet resumere, cum hac intentione: quod si consecratio esset facta, nullo modo voluisset consecrare; sed si consecratio non esset facta, vellet corpus et sanguinem consecrare.

intentione et devotione distractus fuerit, nihilominus consecrat; dummodo intentio habitualis in eo remanserit; summo sacerdote, scilicet Christo, supplente ejus defectum.

Si autem per nimiam distractionem habitualis intentio cum actuali tolleretur, videtur quod deberet verba consecrationis cum actuali intentione resumere, sic tamen quod nollet consecrare, si consecratio facta esset.

Item si hostia consecrata propter frigus, vel alia de causa, labitur sacerdoti in calicem, sive ante divisionem hostiæ, sive post; non debet eam de sanguine extrahere, nec aliquid propter hoc reiterare, vel immutare circa celebrationem sacramenti; sed procedat in signis et in aliis, ac si haberet eam in manibus.

Si eucharistia ad terram ceciderit, locus ubi jacuit radatur, et incineretur per ignem, et cinis juxta altare recondatur.

¶ Item si per negligentiam aliquid de sanguine stillaverit, super tabulam quæ terræ adhæret, stilla per sacerdotem cum lingua lambatur, et locus tabulæ radatur, et rasura igni comburatur, et cinis juxta altare cum reliquiis recondatur, et quadraginta diebus pœniteat cui hoc accidit.

Si vero super linteum et ad aliud stilla pervenerit, quatuor diebus pœniteat. Si usque ad tertium, novem diebus pœniteat. Si usque ad quartum stilla sanguinis pervenerit, viginti diebus pœniteat, et linteamina quæ stilla tetigerit tribus vicibus lavet sacerdos, vel diaconus, calice supposito, et ablutio cum reliquiis recondatur.

juxta altare debent recondi. Et si fuerit clericus, monachus, presbyter, vel diaconus, quadraginta diebus pœniteat, episcopus septuaginta, laicus triginta.

Qui vero non bene custodit sacramentum, ita quod mus vel aliud animal comederit, quadraginta diebus pœniteat.

Qui autem perdiderit illud, vel pars ejus ceciderit et non fuerit inventa, triginta diebus pœniteat. Eadem pœnitentia videtur dignus sacerdos, per cujus negligentiam putrescunt hostiæ consecratæ. Dictis autem diebus pœnitens debet jejunare, et a communione, et a celebratione abstinere. Pensatis tamen circumstantiis delicti et personæ, potest minui vel augeri pœnitentia prædicta, secundum arbitrium discreti confessoris. Hoc autem tenendum est, quod ubicunque inveniuntur species sacramenti integræ, reverenter sumendæ sunt: quod si sine periculo fieri non potest, sunt tamen pro reliquiis reservandæ.

Item si hostia, vel pars hostiæ inventa fuerit sub palla vel corporali, et dubitatur si est consecrata vel non, debet eam post sumptionem sanguinis reverenter sumere, ut in titulo de celebratione missarum plenius invenies.

Item circa materiam sanguinis vide ne sit agresta, vel vinum ita debile, quod nullo modo habeat speciem vini. Ne sit aqua rubea expressa de panno intincto in vino rubeo. Ne sit acetum, vel vinum omnino corruptum; ne sit claretum, vel vinum de moris aut malogranatis confectum; quia veram speciem vini non retinent.

Conficiens cum vino quod est in via corruptionis, vel ad corruptionem tendens, gravissime peccat (licet conficiat) quoniam non retinet speciem vini.

Item cavendum est, ne apponatur nisi modicum de aqua, quia si tantum poneretur quod speciem vini tolleret, non conficeretur.

 Adventu, ad missam: et de Officiis singulorum
 ministrorum.⁶⁷

DOMINICA prima in adventu, peracta processione, dum tertia cantatur, executor officii et sui ministri ad missam dicendam se induant, et si episcopus fuerit, tres habeat diaconos et totidem subdiaconos ad minus, sicut in omni festo novem lectionum, quando ipse exequitur officium. In die vero pentecostes, et in die cœnæ, septem diaconos et septem subdiaconos et tres acolytos. In aliis vero duplicibus, quinque tantum. Die vero parasceve, unum solum diaconum, et unum solum subdiaconum.

Cantata vero tertia et officio missæ inchoato, dum post officium "Gloria patri" inchoatur, executor officii cum suis ministris ordinate presbyterium intrent, et ad altare accedant: diacono et subdiacono casulis indutis, manus tamen ad modum sacerdotis extra casulam non tenentibus. Cæteris ministris in albis existentibus: quibus vero temporibus, diaconi et subdiaconi casulis, dalmaticis, et tunicis, et albis uti debeant, in ordinali plene describitur. Ad graof which I have given some account at the end of the dissertation on service books, Monumenta ritualia, vol. i. p. ccxxiv, with some other extracts.

dum autem altaris sacerdos ipse confessionem dicat : diacono ei assistente a dextris, subdiacono a sinistris : et sciendum quod quisque sacerdos officium exequatur, semper episcopus si præsens fuerit ad gradum altaris, " Confiteor " dicat. Dicta vero ab absolute, sacerdos diaconum deosculetur ; deinde subdiaconum : quod semper observatur, nisi missa pro fidelibus fuerit dicenda, et exceptis tribus ultimis diebus in passione Domini. His peractis, ceroferarii candelabra cum cereis ad gradum altaris demittant. Post humiliationem vero sacerdotis ad altare factam, ipsum altare sacerdos thurificet, diaconi ministerio : deinde ab ipso diacono ipse sacerdos thurificetur ; et postea textum ministerio subdiaconi deosculetur. His peractis, in dextro cornu altaris, cum diacono et subdiacono, officium missæ usque ad orationem prosequatur, sive usque ad " Gloria in excelsis," quando " Gloria in excelsis " dicitur. Quo facto sacerdos, cum suis ministris, in sedibus ad hoc paratis se recipiant, usque ad orationem dicendam, vel in alio tempore, usque ad " Gloria in excelsis " incipiendum. Dum vero sacerdos ad officium exequendum stat ad altare, diaconus post eum stet in primo gradu ante altare : deinde subdiaconus ordinate, ita quod quoties sacerdos ad populum se convertit, diaconus similiter se convertat : subdiacono interim ipsi sacerdoti de casula aptanda subministrante. Sciendum autem quod quicquid a sacerdote dicitur ante epistolam, in dextro cornu altaris expletur. Similiter post perceptionem sacramenti : cætera omnia in medio altaris fiunt. Post introitum vero missæ, unus ceroferariorum panem, et vinum, et aquam, in pixide et phiolis solemniter ad locum ubi panis, vinum, et aqua, ad eucharistiæ ministrationem disponuntur, deferat. Reliquus vero ceroferarius pelves cum aqua et manutergio. Incepta vero ultima oratione ante epistolam, casula interim deposita, subdiaconus per medium chori ad legendam epistolam ad pulpitem accedat, et dum epistola legitur, duo pueri in superpelliciis facta inclinatione ad altare ad gradum chori, in pulpito ipso se ad cantandum gradale præparent. Interim etiam veniant duo ceroferarii obviam acolyto ad ostium presbyterii, cum veneratione ipsum calicem ad locum prædictæ administrationis deferenti, offertorio et corporalibus ipsi calici superpositis : est autem acolytus in albis, et mantello serico, ad hoc parato. Calice itaque in loco debito reposito, corporalia ipse acolytus super altare solemniter deponat, ipsum altare in recessu deosculando. Quo facto ceroferarii candelabra cum cereis, ad gradum altaris demittant. Lecta epistola, subdiaconus panem et vinum, post manuum ablutionem, ad eucharistiæ ministrationem in loco ipsius administrationis præparet ministerio acolyti. Dum gradale canitur, duo de superiore gradu ad cantandum "Alleluia" cappis sericis se induant, et ad pulpitem accedant. Dicto vero gradali, pueri cantores ad gradum altaris inclinaturi redeant. Post quoque epistolam unus ceroferariorum cum aliquo puero de choro aquilam in pulpito ad legendum evangelium ornando præparet. Dum "Alleluia" canitur, diaconus prius ablutis manibus, casula humerum sinistrum modo stolæ succinctus, corporalia super altare disponat. Dum prosa canitur, diaconus ipse altare thurificet; deinde ad commonitionem puerorum ministrantium a choro ad ministeria sua redientium, accepto texto evangeliorum et data ei humiliato a sacerdote benedictione, cum ceroferariis et thuribulo præcedente, subdiaconus librum lectionis evangelicæ deferente per medium chori, ad pulpitem accedat. Textum ipsum super sinistram manum solemniter gestando : et cum ad locum legendi pervenerit, textum ipsum subdiaconus accipiat; et a sinistris ipsius diaconi, ipsum dum evangelium legitur teneat. Et lecto evangelio, ipsum deosculandum ipsi diacono porrigat a dextra parte ipsius. In redeundo tamen, textum ipsum ad altare ex directo pectore deferat. Post inceptionem "Credo in unum," sacerdos ipse ministerio diaconi thurificetur, et postea, ministerio subdiaconi, textum deosculetur. Quo peracto, chorus, ministerio pueri, more solito incensetur, sequente subdiacono textum deosculandum singulis eo ordine quo incensantur porrigente. His peractis, acolyto ministrante subdiacono, subdiacono ipsi diacono, sacerdos prius hostiam super patenam, deinde calicem a manu diaconi accipiat. Diacono manum ipsius sacerdotis, utraque vice, deosculante. Postea ordinato sacrificio et debito modo deposito sacerdos sacrificium, ministerio diaconi, ter in signum crucis thurificet; deinde ter in circuitu; postea ex utraque parte sacrificii. Quo peracto sacerdos manus abluat, ministerio subdiaconi et aliorum ministrorum. Diacono interim ipsum altare in sinistro cornu incensante, et reliquias, more solito, in circuitu. Accedente autem sacerdote ad divinum obsequium exequendum, diaconus et subdiaconus suis gradibus ordinate se teneant. Et si episcopus celebraverit, omnes diaconi in eodem gradu diaconorum consistent: principali diacono medium locum inter eos obtinente. Simili modo subdiaconi in gradu subdiaconorum se habeant. Cæteris omnibus diaconis et subdiaconis gestum principalis diaconi, et principalis subdiaconi imitantibus. Excepto quod principalis subdiaconus sacerdoti ad populum convertenti solus ministret. Sacerdote vero "Per omnia sæcula" incipiente, subdiaconus offertorium et patenam a manu diaconi accipiat, et ipsam tenendam, quousque oratio dominica dicatur, acolyto offertorio coopertam committat in gradu post subdiaconum interim constituto. Sciendum autem quod pueri ministrantes, dum secretum missæ tractatur, in choro moram faciunt exteriorem locum primæ formæ tenentes, quousque sacerdos, cancellatis manibus, ad altare se inclinet. Tunc enim ad altare accedunt ad ministrandum diacono in manuum ablutione cum subdiacono. Sacerdote vero corpore Domini calicem in modum crucis signante, diaconus ei a dextris assistat, eique in corporalibus sustinendis subministret. Inchoata vero oratione dominica, diaconus patenam a manu subdiaconi recipiat, et post dictam orationem dominicam eam sacerdoti porrigat: post tertium "Per omnia" si episcopus celebraverit, diaconus ad populum conversus, baculum episcopi in dextra tenens, curvatura baculi ad se conversa, dicat "Humiliate vos ad benedictionem." Deinde episcopus, eucharistia interim super patenam reposita, super populum faciat benedictionem. Ad "Agnus Dei" dicendum, ascendat diaconus et subdiaconus ad sacerdotem uterque a dextris; diaconus propior, subdiaconus remotior. Pacem vero diaconus a sacerdote accipiat: deinde primo subdiaconum; deinde ad gradum chori rectorem ex parte decani; dehinc alium ex parte cantoris, osculetur: qui duo pacem choro reportent, incipientes a decano et cantore, vel ab his qui stallis eorum stant proximiores. Post perceptionem sacramenti, sacerdote ad manus abluendas veniente, diaconus corporalia complicit et in loculo reponat. Postea vero ipsa corporalia calici cum offertorio superponat; ipsumque calicem, dum postcommunio dicitur, ipsi acolyto committat, qui dum "Per omnia" dicitur post orationem, ea solemnitate qua eum apportavit reportet. Post "Benedicamus" dictum a diacono, iterum casula induto, ad populum converso, et post inclinationem a se factam,

⁶⁸ These examinations of illiterate priests, presented to a dean of Salisbury at a visitation of his peculiars in the early part of the thirteenth century, viz. A.D. 1222, are taken from the same manuscript, the Registrum S. Osmundi, fol. xliij, and are written in a contemporary hand, probably being the authentic record at the time. Certainly they have little else to do with my present subject, beyond the canon being made the test of a competent knowledge, but they are extremely curious.

A year or two before this very time the provincial constitutions of archbishop Stephen Langton had been published; and, probably, increased care was taken at visitations to correct illiterate priests. All archdeacons were directed to ascertain "quod sacerdotes rite noverint proferre verba canonis et baptismatis; et quod in hac parte sanum habeant intellectum." On which Lyndwood thus glosses: "Canonis. Et dic canonis, i. e. sacramentalium verborum. Vel canonis, i. e. omnium quæ sequuntur præfationem usque ad orationem Dominicam. Sanum intellectum, i. e. fidelem intellectum, sive catholicum." Lib. i. tit. 10, Ut archidiaconi.

tions, after which those presented were declared to be sufficiently learned. Undoubtedly these examples show a large amount of ignorance in more than one case of the clergy who were examined; but equally beyond doubt they prove the care which was taken by those who were in authority to check the evil. We must remember, moreover, that the early part of the thirteenth century included many years of the reign of probably the worst monarch who ever wore the English crown; when everything seemed for a time to be given up to tyranny, cruelty, and confusion.

It would be highly improper for me to presume to offer any opinion upon the general state of theological learning among Anglican clergy of our own day. One fact, I think, cannot be disputed. During the last fifty years there has been a great improvement. But looking further back, it may very fairly be a question whether the illiterate priests of the thirteenth century might not easily have been overmatched in numbers by the rectors and curates of the eighteenth; and most certainly the penalty for ignorance was not so sharply and carefully administered by bishops or deans in their visitapræsentavit capellanum, quem secum habet, nomine Simonem, quem modo retinuit usque ad festum B. Michaelis. Requisitus idem Simon de suis ordinibus; dicit, quod apud Oxoniam recepit ordinem subdiaconi, a quodam episcopo Ybernæ, Albino nomine, tunc vicario episcopi Lincolniensis. Item ab eodem recepit ordinem diaconi. Item ordinem presbyteratus ab Hugone modo Lincolniensi episcopo: transactis quatuor annis. Probatus fuit de evangelio Dominicæ primæ in adventu et inventus est minus habens, nec intelligens quod legeret. Item probatus fuit de canone missæ: "Te igitur, clementissime Pater," &c. Nescivit cujus casus esset "Te" nec a qua parte regeretur. Et cum dictum esset ei, ut diligenter inspiceret quæ pars posset competentius regere "Te," dixit, quod Pater, qui omnia regit. Requisitus quid esset "clementissime," vel cujus casus, vel qualiter declinaretur; nescivit. Requisitus quid esset "Clemens;" nescivit. Item idem Simon nullam differentiam antiphonarum novit, nec cantum hymnorum, nec etiam de illo, "Nocte surgentes:" nec aliquid scit de officio divino, vel psalterio corde-tenus. Dixit etiam, quod indecens ei videbatur quod probaretur coram decano, cum jam esset ordinatus. Requisitus super quo fuisset probatus quando ordinem presbyteratus accepit: dicit quod non meminit. Sufficenter illiteratus est.

Johannes de Herst præsentavit capellanum suum Ricardum nomine, natum apud Rosam. Juvenis quidem est, et nihil scit. Dicit quod ordinem subdiaconi recepit London. a Willielmo episcopo. Ab epi-

The rector of a small and remote parish in Dorset, a neighbour of mine about the year 1838,	reading the second evening lesson, told his congregation that St. Paul besought Philemon for his "son, one Simus, whom he had begotten in his bonds." scopo Petro, Winton. ordinem diaconi, transactis sex annis : a Willielmo vero episcopo Cestrensi eodem anno ordinem presbyteratus. Probatus de hac collecta adventus : "Excita quæsumus Domine ;" dixit quod nihil voluit respondere. Requisitus de canone, dixit, quod nihil voluit super hoc respondere. Postquam enim suus presbyter primo exierat ab ecclesia post examinationem, et venisset ad alios, omnes inierunt consilium unum quod non responderent. Aliqui tamen eorum in articulo responderunt postea ad magnam instantiam decani. Postea requisitus noluit in ultimo capitulo examinari, et remansit suspensus.

Johannes de Erburge præsentavit capellanum Reginaldum, natum apud Windelshoram. Ordinatus sicut ipse dicit, ad ordinem subdiaconi apud Sarum. diaconi vero et presbyt. apud Winton. transactis jam iiij annis. Probatus de hac oratione "Excita," &c., et de hoc textu canonis, "Te igitur, clementissime Pater ;" nihil prorsus voluit respondere. Postea venit et obtulit se examinationi et nihil scivit, vel legere vel canere.

Capellanus de Sandhurst Johannes de Sireburñ. dicit quod ordinatus fuit subdiaconum apud Cicestriam : diaconum apud Winton. ab episcopo Godefrido, in Ybernia : et jam ministravit in prædicta capella per iiij annos. Probatus de hac oratione "Excita," &c., et de "Te igitur," nihil scit respondere. Probatus de cantu, de offertorio dominicæ adventus, scilicet : "Ad te levavi ;" nescivit cantare.

Item Vitalis presbyter præsentavit ad capellam de Rotiscamp Jordanum presbyterum, natum apud Stratton in Dorset. Ordinatus ut dicit subdiaconum et diaconum apud Sarum ab episcopo Herberto. Presbyterum autem ab episcopo Roffensi Gilberto de Glanvill. ante generale interdictum. Probatus ut alii supra, de oratione "Excita," et "Te igitur;" nihil scit. Proposito ei libro ut cantaret, noluit cantare. Præceptum est Vitali, ut bonos capellanos inveniatur et ibi et apud Sunning; vel decanus capiet beneficia in manus suas.

Item apud Erberge fuit quidam veteranus in domo Ricardi Bulloc, presbyter quidam de Rading; et cum probaretur a decano, utrum videret⁶⁹ et utrum verba integra proferret, inventum est quod nullum verbum evangelii vel canonis integrum potuit proferre. Et ideo præcepit decanus Johanni de Erburge ne ulterius permetteret eum ministrare in capella illa.

MODUS induendi pontificem ad solemmniter celebrandum. Primo veniat pontifex ante altare, vel alibi, ubi dispositum fuerit: et prostratus breviter oret. Et surgens ponet se ad cathedram, et statim incipiantur psalmi consueti: "Quam dilecta" &c., ut infra. Interim ministri vel domicelli caligas cum sandalis secrete extenso superiori indumento ei subministrent. Deinde manutergium cum aqua ad lavandum deportent. Postea exuat cappam et induat amictum, albam, et stolam: et reliquias circa collum, ac deinceps tunicam, dehinc dalmaticam, et manipulum. Et tunc consedendo chirothecas manibus imponat, et annulum pontificalem magnum una cum uno parvo strictiori annulo ad tenendum fortius superimponat. Et sudarium retortum in manu recipiat, ad faciem extergendam. Et sic sedendo post psalmos infra scriptos orationes sequentes consuetas perdicat. Et cum hora fuerit, surgat et casulam induat, et mitram capiti imponat, et baculum pastorem in manu sua sinistra assumat, curvatura baculi ad populum conversa, cujus contrarium faciant ministri tenendo baculum vel portando. Et sic, choro canente "Gloria Patri" vel alias officium incipiente, procedat de sacrario ad altare populum benedicendo. Et veniens ante altare, deposita mitra, dicat confessionem. Qua dicta, repo-natur mitra usque ad principium primæ collectæ de die, ita quod salutando populum ante principalem orationem dicat versus populum: "Pax vobis." Et deponatur mitra dum dicitur collecta, et post collectam, dicto "Jesum Christum Filium tuum," ad hæc verba, "Qui tecum," reponatur mitra usque ad evangelium, et tunc amoveatur, recepto baculo, usque inceperit "Credo in unum." Et tunc utatur mitra usque postquam verterit se ad populum, dicendo "Orate fratres." Et hoc dicto conversus ad altare, removeat minister mitram et ponat eam super cornu altaris, quasi stando, quousque fiat benedictio super populum: missam quoque totam sicut cæteri sacerdotes dicat. Et post "per omnia" ante pacem faciat benedictionem solemnem super populum, diacono baculum in manibus tenente, et ad chorum converso, dicendo alta voce, "Humiliate vos ad benedictionem."

Et sic eucharistia super patenam reposita, acceptaque mitra, et baculo in manu sinistra, et manu dextra super populum elevata, dicat benedictionem prout tempus exigit et requirit. Et postea remotis mitra et baculo, reversus ad altare dicat: "Et pax ejus." Et cætera sequentia sicut alii sacerdotes, nisi quod lotis manibus reponat mitram et resumat chirothecas et annulos, et postquam se verterit ad populum, dicat: "Dominus vobiscum," et reversus amoveatur mitra, dum dicitur postcommunio. Et iterum post orationem resumatur, ut supra in prima oratione. Et sic mitratus recedat, dicendo evangelium: "In principio," cum psalmo, "Benedicite sacerdotes."

episcopum.⁷¹

CELEBRATURUS pontifex missarum sollemnia, quosdam psalmos et orationes ex institutione Celestini papæ primo præmittit, quos interim dum caligis et sandalis ornatur dicet secundum exhortationem psalmistæ dicentis.

Hi quinque psalmi sunt qui dici debent, viz.

Quam dilecta tabernacula tua, Domine. Ps. lxxxiiij.

Benedixisti, Domine, terram tuam. Ps. lxxxiv.

Inclina, Domine, aurem tuam et exaudi me. Ps. lxxxv.

Credidi propter quod locutus sum. Ps. cxv.

De profundis clamavi. Ps. cxxix.

Ant. Veni, Domine, visitare nos in pace, ut lætemur coram te corde perfecto.

Kyrie eleison. Christe eleison. Kyrie eleison.

Pater noster. Et ne nos.

Resp. Ut cantem.

Vers. Domine, averte faciem tuam a peccatis meis.

Resp. Et omnes.

Resp. Et spiritum.

Vers. Redde mihi lætitiā salutaris tui.

Resp. Et spiritum.

Resp. Et sancti.

Vers. Domine Deus, converte nos.

Resp. Et ostende.

Resp. Et clamor.

Vers. Dominus vobiscum.

Oremus.

¶ Oratio. Aures tuæ pietatis, mitissime Deus, inclina precibus meis, et gratia sancti spiritus illumina cor meum, ut tuis mysteriis digne ministrare merear. Per Christum.

Actiones nostras, quæsumus Domine, aspirando præveni et adjuvando proseguere, ut cuncta nostra operatio a te semper incipiat, et per te cœpta finiatur.

Fac me, quæso Deus, ita justitia indui, ut in electorum tuorum merear exultatione lætari, quatenus exutus ab omnibus sordibus peccatorum consortium adipiscar tibi placentium sacerdotum, meque tua misericordia a vitiis omnibus exuat quem reatus propriæ conscientię gravat. Per Christum.

Caligis et sandalis impositis, pontifex priusquam sibi amictum imponat, caput peccinat, manus et faciem lavat, et dum lavit dicat episcopus hanc orationem.

Miserere mei, Deus, miserere mei : et munda me a reatibus cunctis, et cum illis qui dealbaverunt stolas suas in sanguine Agni mereamur perfrui gaudiis perpetuis.

Indue me, Pater clementissime, novum hominem, deposito veteri cum actibus suis, qui secundum Deum creatus est in justitia et sanctitate veritatis.

Indue me, Domine, lorica fidei, et galea salutis, ac gladio Spiritus sancti. Amen.

Deinde dicat episcopus antequam accedat ad altare:

Ant. Introibo ad altare, &c., ut continetur in missale.

Cum vero episcopus exuerit casulam, et alia indumenta episcopalia, dicat hos psalmos sub uno Gloria Patri, cum hac antiphona: Trium puerorum.

Ps. Benedicite sacerdotes, usque ad finem.

Ps. Laudate Dominum in sanctis.

Ps. Nunc dimittis. Gloria Patri. Sicut.

Sequatur: Kyrie eleison. Christe eleison. Kyrie eleison. Pater noster. Et ne nos.

Resp. Laudemus.

Benedictus es, Domine, in firmamento cœli.

Benedicat et custodiat.

Domine Deus virtutum.

Domine, exaudi.

Dominus vobiscum.

Oremus.

Oratio. Deus qui tribus pueris.

Oratio. Ure igne.

Oratio. Actiones.

Et finiatur sic: Per Christum Dominum nostrum.
Amen.

Infra canonem.

Communicantes, et diem sacratissimum celebrantes, quo Dominus noster Jesus Christus pro nobis traditus est: sed et memoriam venerantes, in primis gloriosæ semper virginis Mariæ genitricis ejusdem Dei et Domini nostri Jesu Christi: sed et beatorum apostolorum ac martyrum tuorum, Petri, et Damiani: et omnium sanctorum tuorum, quorum meritis precibusque concedas: ut in omnibus protectionis tuæ muniamur auxilio. Per eundem Christum Dominum nostrum. Amen.

Item. Hanc igitur oblationem servitutis nostræ, sed et cunctæ familiæ tuæ, quam tibi offerimus ob diem in quo Dominus noster Jesus Christus tradidit discipulis suis corporis et sanguinis sui mysteria celebranda, quæsumus Domine, ut placatus accipias, diesque nostros in tua pace disponas, atque ab æterna damnatione nos eripi, et in electorum tuorum jubeas grege numerari. Per Christum Dominum nostrum. Amen.

Qui pridie quam pateretur pro nostra omniumque salute, hoc est hodie; accepit panem in sanctas ac venerabiles manus suas, et elevatis oculis in cælum ad te Deum, &c.

¶ Sequens præfatio dicitur in die paschæ, et per totam hebdomadam, et in omnibus dominicis, usque ad ascensionem, quando de dominica sive de pascha dicitur missa. Sed in vigilia paschæ tantum dicitur in præfatione, Sed in hac potissimum nocte. Quandoque vero alias dicitur; dicitur, Sed in hac potissimum die. Communicantes vero, et Hanc igitur per hebdomadam, et in octava paschæ tantum dicuntur: ita quod in vigilia paschæ tantum dicitur, noctem sacratissimam. In die vero paschæ, et alias quando dicitur, diem sacratissimum, dicatur, enim verus est agnus, qui abstulit peccata mundi. Qui mortem nostram moriendo destruxit, et vitam resurgendo reparavit. Et ideo cum angelis, &c.

Æterne Deus. Et te quidem omni tempore, sed in hac potissimum die (nocte) gloriosius prædicare, cum pascha nostrum immolatus est Christus. Ipse

Communicantes, et diem sacratissimum (noctem sacratissimam) celebrantes resurrectionis Domini nostri Jesu Christi, secundum carnem: sed et memoriam venerantes, in primis gloriosæ semper virginis Mariæ genitricis ejusdem Dei et Domini nostri Jesu Christi: sed et beatorum apostolorum ac martyrum tuorum, Petri et Damiani: et omnium sanctorum tuorum, quorum meritis precibusque concedas, ut in omnibus protectionis tuæ muniamur auxilio. Per eundem Christum Dominum nostrum. Amen.

Item. Hanc igitur oblationem servitutis nostræ, sed et cunctæ familiæ tuæ, quam tibi offerimus pro his quoque, quos regenerare dignatus es ex aqua et Spiritu sancto, tribuens eis remissionem omnium peccatorum, quæsumus Domine, ut placatus accipias, diesque nostros in tua pace disponas, atque ab æterna damnatione nos eripi, et in electorum tuorum jubeas grege numerari. Per Christum Dominum nostrum. Amen.

Æterne Deus: per Christum Dominum nostrum. Qui post resurrectionem suam omnibus discipulis suis manifestus apparuit; et ipsis cernentibus est elevatus in cælum, ut nos divinitatis suæ tribueret esse participes. Et ideo cum angelis.

Communicantes, et diem sacratissimum celebrantes, quo Dominus noster Jesus Christus unigenitus Filius tuus, unitam sibi fragilitatis nostræ substantiam in gloriæ tuæ dextera collocavit. Sed et memoriam venerantes, in primis gloriosæ semper virginis Mariæ genitricis ejusdem Dei et Domini nostri Jesu Christi : sed et beatorum apostolorum ac martyrum tuorum Petri, et Damiani : et omnium sanctorum tuorum quorum meritis precibusque concedas, ut in omnibus protectionis tuæ muniamur auxilio. Per eundem.

Communicantes, et diem sacratissimum pentecostes celebrantes, quo Spiritus sanctus apostolis in igneis linguis apparuit. Sed et memoriam venerantes, in primis gloriosæ semper virginis Mariæ genitricis ejusdem Dei et Domini nostri Jesu Christi ; sed et beatorum apostolorum ac martyrum tuorum Petri, et Damiani : et omnium sanctorum tuorum quorum meritis precibusque concedas, ut in omnibus protectionis tuæ muniamur auxilio. Per eundem Christum Dominum nostrum. Amen.

Item. Hanc igitur oblationem servitutis nostræ, sed et cunctæ familiæ tuæ, quam tibi offerimus pro his quoque, quos regenerare dignatus es ex aqua

Æterne Deus. Qui cum unigenito Filio tuo et Spiritu sancto unus es Deus, unus es Dominus: non in unius singularitate personæ, sed in unius Trinitate substantiæ. Quod enim de tua gloria, revelante te, credimus, hoc de Filio tuo, hoc de Spiritu sancto, sine differentia discretionis sentimus. Ut in confessione veræ sempiternæque Deitatis, et in personis proprietas, et in essentia unitas, et in maiestate adoretur æqualitas. Quam laudant angeli atque archangeli, cherubin quoque ac seraphin, qui non cessant clamare una voce dicentes.

Æterne Deus: et te Domine suppliciter exorare, ut gregem tuum, pastor æterne, non deseras: sed per beatos apostolos tuos continua protectione custodias. Ut iisdem rectoribus gubernetur, quos operis tui vicarios eidem contulisti præesse pastores. Et ideo cum angelis et archangelis, cum thronis et dominationibus, cumque omni militia cœlestis exercitus hymnum gloriæ tuæ canimus, sine fine dicentes.

Æterne Deus. Qui salutem humani generis in ligno constituisti, ut unde mors oriebatur, inde vita resurgeret: et qui in ligno vicerat, in ligno quoque vinceretur: per Christum Dominum nostrum. Per quem majestatem tuam laudant angeli, adorant dominationes, tremunt potestates. Cœli, cœlorumque virtutes, ac beata seraphin socia exultatione concelebrant. Cum quibus et nostras voces ut admitti jubeas deprecamur, supplici confessione dicentes.

Æterne Deus: et te in conceptione, et te in annunciatione, et te in assumptione, et te in nativitate, et te in visitatione, et te in veneratione beatæ et gloriosæ semper virginis Mariæ exultantibus animis, laudare, benedicere, et prædicare. Quæ et unigenitum tuum sancti Spiritus obumbratione concepit: et virginitatis gloria permanente, huic mundo lumen æternum effudit, Jesum Christum Dominum nostrum. Per quem majestatem tuam laudant angeli, adorant dominationes, tremunt potestates. Cœli, cœlorumque virtutes, ac beata seraphin socia exultatione concelebrant. Cum quibus et nostras voces ut admitti jubeas deprecamur, supplici confessione dicentes.

Benedictiones Episcopales.⁷³

The following selections will enable the reader to judge of the general character of the episcopal benedictions, which were anciently given during the canon of the mass when a bishop officiated. They are referred to in the Sarum manual, and probably were continued in the English church until the alteration of the service in the reign of Edward the sixth, although they had been long disused elsewhere. The reader will find more information about them in my dissertation on the service books (Mon. rit. vol. I), to which I must venture to refer him. The Sarum benedictions do not agree with those in the pontifical of the church of Bangor, nor with many of those in the Exeter pontifical of bishop Lacy; but rather with the benedictional of St. Æthelwold,⁷⁴ and, though there are considerable variations, with the benedictions at the end of the Junta Roman pontifical of 1520, the only printed edition in which they are contained.

The benedictions in the Exeter manuscript are stated to have been edited and published by John Peckham, archbishop of Canterbury.

Benedictio in festo sancti Stephani protomartyris.

Deus, qui beatum Stephanum protomartyrem et confessione fidei et agone coronavit martyrii, mentes vestras circumdet in præsentī sæculo corona justitiæ, et in futuro perducatur ad coronam gloriæ sempiternæ. Amen.

Benedicat vos omnipotens Deus, hodierna interveniente paschali solemnitatem: et ab omni miseratus dignetur defendere pravitate. Amen.

Omnipotens Trinitas, unus et verus Deus, Pater et Filius, et Spiritus sanctus, det vobis eum desiderare feliciter, agnoscere veraciter, diligere sinceriter. Amen.

Æqualitatem atque incommutabilitatem suæ essentiae ita vestris mentibus infigat, ut ab eo nunquam vos quibuscumque phantasiis aberrare permittat. Amen.

Summæ providentiæ Dominus qui post lapsum protoplastorum per bona matrimonii usum carnalis desiderii excusabilem existere decrevisti, sanctificare digneris conjugale propositum in quo præsentis conjuges abdicatis tori illiciti maculis nectere voluisti. Amen.

Da eis sub præsentis commercii indulgentia inquinamenta cætera devitare: ut fructum tricenum ex verbi tui semine valeant obtinere. Amen.

VIII.

The following prayers are taken from a manuscript missal in my possession, of the thirteenth century; it formerly belonged to some English Benedictine monastery. I do not remember to have seen these prayers in any other missal; they are placed immediately before the prefaces, after the ordinary. Martene, among the numerous orders which he gives in the first volume of his collections, has printed an ancient one preserved in the Colbertine library, in which some similar prayers may be found; De ant. ecc. rit. tom. i. p. 194.

AD miscendum. Ex latere Christi sanguis et aqua exisse perhibetur, et ideo pariter commiscemus: ut omnipotens et misericors Deus utrumque ad medelam animarum nostrarum sanctificare dignetur. Qui vivit.

Ad corporale sternendum. In tuo conspectu, Domine, quæsumus hæc nostra munera tibi placita sint, ut nos tibi placere valeamus. Per Dominum.

Ad calicem. Offerimus tibi, Domine, hæc munera in memoriam Jesu Christi, Filii tui, humiliter deprecantes clementiam tuam: ut ante conspectum Divinæ majestatis tuæ, cum odore suavitatis ascendant. Per eundem.

Super hostiam impositam. Suscipe, Domine sancte,

Pater omnipotens, æterne Deus, hanc hostiam oblationis, quam ego indignus et peccator tibi Deo meo vivo et vero humiliter offero: et mittere dignare Spiritum sanctum tuum de cœlis, qui sua admixtione sanctificet hœc munus tibi oblatum. Per ejus.

Missa pro rege.

The "missa pro rege" is included among the votive or occasional masses in many editions of the Sarum missal. The office which follows is taken from a remarkable little volume printed on vellum, in the Bodleian library (Gough, 160), of which no other copy is known. Unfortunately the title is wanting and there is no colophon.

The first page contains the collect, secret, and postcommunion for Henry the seventh. The second page has the "Præparatio ad missam," with the form of confession for the priest who is about to celebrate if he wishes to confess at that time. This form is commonly to be found in editions of the Sarum missal.

VOLENS confiteri dicat sacerdos: Benedicite, pater.

Indulgentiam et absolutionem, &c.

Meritum passionis Domini nostri Jesu Christi, suffragia sanctæ matris ecclesiæ, bona quæ fecisti et quæ per Dei gratiam facies sint tibi in remissionem peccatorum tuorum: injungat penitentiam dicens, et pro penitentia speciali dices hoc et hoc, vel facies hoc et hoc.

Tunc absolvat, dicens :

Dominus noster Jesus Christus qui est summus pontifex per suam piissimam misericordiam te absolvat. Et ego auctoritate mihi concessa absolvo te primo a sententia minoris excommunicationis si indigeas. Deinde absolvo te ab omnibus peccatis tuis, in nomine Patris, &c.

Then follow the prayers before putting on the vestments; after which are the ordinary and canon of the mass. The remainder of the volume contains some eight or ten votive masses. Among them are those for the cross; for our lady; for the dead; for the five wounds; and for fevers.

The book seems to have been printed by Wynkyn de Worde or Pynson, about the year 1500. Possibly this collection of short masses was intended to be used in royal chapels only; and very few copies were printed.

The "missa pro rege" in the Sarum missals includes other portions of the service.

Officium. Protector noster aspice Deus, et respice in faciem Christi tui: quia melior est dies una in atriis tuis super millia.

Ps. Quam dilecta tabernacula tua, Domine virtutum: concupiscit et deficit anima mea in atria Domini.

Epistola. Orationem faciebant sacerdotes.

Versus. Auribus percipe, Domine, orationem meam. Alleluia.

Secundum Marcum. In illo tempore : Dixit Jesus discipulis suis ; Amen, dico vobis, quod quicumque dixerit huic monti . . . peccata vestra. (c. xj.)

Postcommunio. Hæc, Domine, salutaris sacramenti . . . quatenus et ecclesiasticæ pacis obtineat tranquillitatem, et post istius temporis decursum ad æternam perveniat hereditatem. Per Dominum."

The same collect, secret, and postcommunion are written on the blank leaf preceding the title in the vellum copy of the Hereford missal in the Bodleian ; headed, " Oratio pro rege et regina."

The words " in terris ecclesiæ Anglicanæ supremum caput " have been almost erased by some contemporary hand.

A manuscript in the British museum contains the benedictions proper to the mass for the king, which up to the reformation were given according to English use, before the Agnus Dei,⁷⁵ when a bishop said the mass :—

"Ben. pro rege. O sempiternæ Deus, qui omnium jura regum immobiliter gubernas, benedic et protege regem nostrum et custodi eum ab omni impedimento æmulorum. Amen.

Sequuntur orationes in missis dicendæ pro bono felici ac prospero statu Christianissimi atque excellentissimi regis nostri Henrici septimi.

Quæsumus, omnipotens et misericors Deus, ut rex noster Henricus septimus, qui tua miseratione regni suscepit gubernacula, virtutum omnium percipiat incrementa, quibus decenter ornatus vitiorum voraginem devitare, corporis incolumitate gaudere, hostes superare, et in tranquilla pace dum in humanis aget tam feliciter possit sua tempora pertransire, ut post hujus vitæ decursum ad te qui via, veritas, et vita es, gratosus valeat pervenire. Per.

Secretum.

Munera, quæsumus, Domine, oblata sanctifica, ut nobis unigeniti tui corpus et sanguis fiant, et famulo tuo Henrico septimo regi nostro obtinendum animæ corporisque salutem: et ad peragendum in firma fide et solida pace injunctum sibi officium, te largiente, usquequaque proficiat. Per.

Postcommunio.

Hæc quæsumus, Domine, salutaris sacramenti perceptio famulum tuum Henricum septimum regem nostrum ab omnibus tueatur adversis, quatenus diuturnam et prosperam vitam in tranquillitate ecclesiasticæ pacis obtineat: et post hujus vitæ decursum ad æternam beatitudinem tua gratia cooperante perveniat. Per.

Constitutionum Apost. lib. 8 ; Cotelarius, Amst. 1724, fol.

The Order of the Communion.¹

Fyrste the personne, uicar or curat, the next Son-day or holy day, or at the least one day before he shall minister the Communion, shal geue warnyng to his parysshioners, or those whyche be present, that they prepare them selves therto, saiyng to them openlie and plainlie as hereafter followeth, or such lyke.

Dere frendes, and you especially, upon whose soules I haue cure and charge, upon daye next I doe intende by Godes grace to offer to all suche as shalbe therto godlie dysposed, y^e most comfortable Sacrament of the body and bloude of Chryste, to be taken of them in the remembrance of his most fructfull and gloryous passion. By the which passion we have obtained remission of our synnes, and be made partakers of the kyngdom of heuen; wherof we be assured and asserteyned yf we come to the sayd Sacrament, with hartye repentance for our offences, stedfast faith in Godes mercye, and earnest mynde to obey godes wyll, and to offend no more: wherfore our duety is, to come to these holy misteries with most harty thanks to be geuen to almighty God, for his infinite mercy and benefites, geuen and bestowed upon vs, his vnworthye seruauntes, for whome he hath not only geuen his body to death and shed his bludde, but also dothe vouchesaufe in a Sacrament, and mysterye, to geue vs his said body and bloud spiritually, to fede and drynke vpon. The whych Sacrament, being so diuine and holy'a thyng, and so comfortable to them whych receaue it worthelye, and so daungerous to them that will presume to take the same vnworthely: my duty is to exhorte you, in the meane season, to consyder the greatnes of the thyng, and to searche and examyne your awne consciences, and that not lightlie, nor after the maner of dyssimulers wyth god; But as they which should come to a most godly and heauenlie banket: not to come, but in the maryage garment, requyred of God in scripture, that you maye so much as lyeth in you, be founde worthie to come to suche a table: The wayes and meanes therto is.

Fyrst, that you be truly repentaunte of your former euell life, and that you confesse wyth an vnfayned harte to almyghtie god your synnes and vnkindnes to wardes his Maiestye committed eyther by wil, worde or dede, infirmitie or ignoraunce, and that wyth inwarde sorowe and teares, you bewayle your offences, and requier of almighty god, mercy, and pardon, promising to him, from the botome of your hartes, thamendment of your former life. And emonges all others, I am commaunded of God, especially to moue and exhorte you, to reconcile your selfs to your neyghbours, whome you haue offended, or who hath offended you, puttynge out of your hartes, al hatered and malyce against them, and to be in loue and charyte wyth all the worlde, and to forgeue other, as you would that God should forgeue you. And if there be any of you, whose conscience is troubled and greued in any thing, lacking comforte or counsaile, let him come to me, or to some other dyscrete and learned priest taught in the lawe of God, and confesse and open his synne and grief secretlie, that he maye receaue suche ghostlie counsaile, aduise, and comforte, that his conscience maye be releued, and that of vs as a minister of God and of the church, he may receaue comfort and absolution to the satisfaction of his mynde and auoyding of al scruple and doubtfulnes : requyring suche as shalbe satisfied with a generall confession, not to be offended with them that doth vse, to their further satisfying, thauriculer and secret confession to the priest, nor those also, which think nedeful or conuenient for the quyetnes of their awne consciences, particularly to open their synnes to the priest, to be offended, with them whiche are satisfied wyth their humble confession to god, and the general confession to the church : But in al these thinges, to folowe and kepe the rule of charitie : and euery man to be satisfied with his awne conscience, not iudginge other mens myndes or actes, wher as he hathe no warrant of Godes worde for the same.

The tyme of the communion, shalbe immediatlíe after that the priest himself hath receaued the Sacrament, without the varyng of any other rite or ceremony in the masse (vntil other order shalbe provided) but as heretofore vsuallie the priest hath done wyth the Sacramente of the body, to prepare, blesse and consecrate so mucche as wyll serue the people: so it shall yet contynue still after the same maner and fourme, saue that he shall blesse and consecrate the byggest chalice or some fayr and conuenient cup or cuppes ful of wyne wyth some water put vnto it. And that daye, not drynke it vp all hym self, but takyng one onlye suppe or draught, leue the rest vpon the aultare couered, and turne to them that are dis-

Derely beloued in the Lord, ye commyng to thys holy communion, must consyder what S. Paule wryteth to the Corinthians, how he exhorteth al personnes diligentlie to trye and examine them selves, or euer they presume to eate of this bread and drink of this cuppe, for as the benefite is greate, if with a truely penitent harte, and lyuely faith, we receiue this holy sacrament (for then we spiritually eate the fleshe of Christ, and drynk his blood: Then we dwell in Christe and Christ in vs, wee be made one with Christ and Christ with vs) so is the daunger greate, if we receyue the same vn-worthelie; for then we become gilty of the body and bloud of Christ, our sauour, we eate and drynke our awne dampnation, because we make no difference of the Lordes body, wee kyndle Godes wrath ouer vs, we prouoke him to plage vs with dyuerse dyseases and sondry kyndes of death. Judge therfore your selves (brethren) that ye be not iudged of the Lord. Let your mynd be without desier to synne. Repent you trulie for your sinnes past, haue an earnest and lyuely faith in Christ, our sauour, be in perfect charytie wyth all men, so that ye be mete partakers of these holy misteries. But aboue all thynges you muste geue most humble and hartye thanks to God the father, the sonne, and the holy ghost, for the redemption of the world, by the deathe and passion of our sauour Christ, both God and man, who dyd humble himself euen to the deathe vpon the crosse for vs miserable synners, liying in darknes and the shadowe of death, that he might make vs the children of God, and exalte vs to euerlasting life. And to thende that wee shoulde alwaye remember the excedyng loue of our master and onlie sauour Iesus Christ thus doing for vs, and the innumerable benefites which by his precyous bloud shedyng he hath obteyned to vs, he hath lefte in these holy misteries as a pledge of hys loue, and a contynuall remembraunce of the same, his awne blessed body and precyous bloud, for vs spiritually to fede vpon, to our endles comforte and consolation. To hym therefore wyth the father and the holy ghost, let vs geue, as wee are most bounden, contynual thankes, submittyng our selves wholly to his holy wyl and pleasure, and studyng to serue hym in true holynes and righteousnes all the dayes of our life. Amen.

Then the priest shall say to them which be redy to take the Sacrament.

If any man here be an open blasphemer, aduouterer, in malice, or enuy, or any other notable cryme, and be not truly sory therefore, and earnestlye mynded to leaue the same vices, or that doth not trust himself to be reconcyled to almighty God, and in charyte with all the worlde, let him yet a while bewayle his synnes and not come to thys holy table, least after the taking of this moste blessed breade, the deuell enter into him, as he dyd into Judas, to fulfill in him all iniquite, and to bring him to destruction, bothe of body and soule.

Heare the priest shal pawse a while, to see yf any man will wythdrawe hym selfe: and if he perceaue any so to do, then let hym common wyth hym pryuely at conuenient leasure, and see whether he can wyth good exhortacion, bring him to grace: and after a lytle pause, the priest shal say.

You that do trulie and earnestlie repent you of your synnes, and offences, commytted to almyghtie God, and be in loue and charytie wyth your neyghbours, and entende to leade a newe life and hartelye to followe the commaundements of God, and to walke from hensforthe in his holye waies, drawe nere, and take this holy Sacrament to your comforte, make your humble confession to almightie God, and to his holy church, here gathered together, in hys name, mekely kneling vpon your knees.

Then shall a generall confession be made in the name of al those that are mynded to receyue the holy Communion, either by one of them, or els by one of the ministers, or by the priest hymself, all kneelyng humbly vpon their knees.

Almyghtie God, father of our lord Jesus Christe, maker of all thinges, iudge of all men, wee knowlege and bewayle our manyfolde synnes and wyckednes, whyche we from tyme to tyme most greuouselie haue commytted by thought, worde, and dede, against thy diuine maiestie, prouoking most iustlye thy wrath and indignacion against vs: wee doe earnestlie repent, and be hartely sory, for these our mysdoinges: The remembraunce of them is greuouse vnto vs, the burthen of them is intollerable; haue mercy vpon vs, haue mercy vpon vs, moste mercyfull father, for thy sonne our Lord Jesus Christes sake. Forgeue vs al that is past, and graunt that we maye euer hereafter, serue and please the in newnes of life, to the honour and glorye of thy name, through Jesus Christ our Lorde.

Our blessed Lord, who hath left power to his church to absolue penitent synners from their synnes, and to restore to the grace of the heauenlye father suche as trulie beleue in Christ, haue mercy vpon you, pardon and delyuer you from al synnes, confyrme and strength you in al goodnes, and bryng you to euerlastyng life.

Then shall the priest stande vp, and turnynge him toward the people, say thus:

Come vnto me al that trauail and be heauy loden, and I shall refreshe you. So God loued the world that he gaue his onlie begotten sonne, to thend that all that beleue in hym shoulde not peryshe, but haue life euerlasting.

Here also what S. Paule sayth.

This is a true sayyng, and worthy of all men to be embraced and receaued, that Jesus Christ came into this world to saue synners.

Heare also what S. John sayth.

Yf any man synne, wee haue an aduocate wyth the father, Jesus Christ the righteous, he it is that obteyned grace for our sinnes.

Then shall the priest kneele doune and saye in the name of all them that shall receaue the Communion, this prayer followyng.

We do not presume to come to this thy table (O merciful Lord) trusting in our awne righteousness, but in thy manifold and greates mercyes; we be not worthie so muche as to gather by the crommes vnder the table. But thou arte the same Lord, whose propertye is alwayes to haue mercy: Graunt vs therefore gracious Lorde so to eate the fleshe of thy dere sonne Jesus Christ, and to drynk his bloud in these holy misteries, that we maye continually dwell in hym, and he in vs, that oure synfull bodyes maye be made cleane by his body, and our soules washed through his most precious bloud. Amen.

Then shall the priest rise, the people still reuerentlie knelyng, and the prieste shall deliuer the communion, first to the ministers, if any be there present, that thai maie be redy to helpe the priest, and after to the other. And when he dooth deliuer the Sacrament of the body of Christe, he shall say to euery one these wordes following.

The bodye of oure Lorde Jesus Christ, whiche was geuen for the, preserue thy body vnto euerlastyng life.

And the priest delyuering the Sacrament of the bloud, and geuyng euery one to drynke once and no more, shall saye.

The bloude of oure Lorde Jesus Christ, which was shed for the, preserue thy soule vnto euerlastyng life.

If there be a deacon or other priest, then shall he followe with the chalyce, and as the priest ministreth the breade, so shall he for more expedicion minister the wine, in forme before wrytten.

Then shal the priest, turnyng him to y^e people, let the people depart with this blessinge.

The peace of God whiche passeth all vnderstandyng, kepe your hartes and myndes in the knowlege and loue of God, and of his sonne Jesus Christe, our Lorde.

To the whiche the people shall answer Amen.

Note, that the breade that shalbe consecrated shalbe suche as heretofore hath bene accustomed. And euery of the sayd consecrated breades, shalbe broken in twoo peces at the least, or more, by the discretion of the ministre, and so distributed. And men must not thynke lesse to be receiued in part then in the whole, but in eche of them the whole body of our sauour Jesu Chryst.

Note, that yf it dothe so chaunce, that the wyne halowed and consecrate dooth not suffice or bee ynough for them that dooe take the Communion, the prieste after the firste cuppe or chalice be emptied, may go

prepare and consecrate an other, and so the thirde, or more lykewyse, begynnyng at these woordes, Simili modo, postquam cenatum est, and endyng at these woordes, qui pro uobis et pro multis effundetur in remissionem peccatorum, and wythout any leuacion or lyftyng vp.*

The Supper of the Lorde, AND THE HOLY COMMUNION,

COMMONLY CALLED THE MASSE.

(According to the first Common Prayer Book of Edward VI, 1549.)

SO many as intende to bee partakers of the holy Communion, shall sygnifie their names to the Curate, ouer night: or els in the morning, afore the beginning of Matins, or immediatly after.

And if any of those be an open and notorious euill liuer, so that the congregacion by hym is offended, or haue doen any wrong to his neighbours, by worde, or dede: The Curate shall call hym, & aduertise hym, in any wise not to presume to the lordes table, vntil he haue openly declared hymselfe, to haue truely repented, and amended his former naughtie life: that the congregacion maie thereby be satisfied, whiche afore were offended: and that he haue recompensed the parties, whom he hath dooen wrong vnto, or at the least bee in full purpose so to doo, as sone as he conueniently maie.

¶ The same ordre shall the Curate vse, with those betwixt whom he perceiueth malice and hatred to reigne, not suffering them to bee partakers of the Lordes table, vntill he knowe them to bee reconciled. And yf one of the parties so at variaunce be content to forgeue from the botome of his harte, all that the other hath trespaced against hym, and to make amendes, for that he hymself hath offended:

and the other partie will not bee perswaded to a godly vnitie, but remaigne still in his frowardnes and malice: The Minister in that case ought to admit the penitent persone to the holy Communion, and not hym that is obstinate.

- ¶ Upon the daie, and at the tyme appoincted for the ministracion of the holy Communion, the Priest that shal execute the holy ministry shall put vpon hym the vesture appoincted for that ministracion, that is to saye: a white Albe plain, with a vestement or Cope. And where there be many Priestes, or Decons, there so many shalbe ready to helpe the Priest, in the ministracion, as shalbee requisite: And shall haue vpon theim lykewise, the vestures appointed for their ministry, that is to saye, Albes, with tunacles. Then shall the Clerkes syng in Englishe for the office, or Introite (as they call it), a Psalme appointed for that daie.

The Priest standing humbly afore the middes of the Altar, shall saie the Lordes praier, with this Collect.

ALMIGHTIE GOD, vnto whom all hartes bee open, and all desyres knowen, and from whom no secretes are hid: clense the thoughtes of our heartes, by the inspiracion of thy holy spirite: that we may perfectly loue thee, and worthely magnifie thy holy name: Through Christ our Lorde. Amen.

Then shall he saie a Psalme appointed for the introite: whiche Psalme ended, the Priest shall saye, or els the Clerkes shal syng.

- iiij. Lorde haue mercie vpon us.
- iiij. Christ haue mercie vpon vs.
- iiij. Lorde haue mercie vpon vs.

Then the Prieste standyng at Goddes borde shall begin.

Glory be to God on high.

The Clerkes.

And in yearth peace, good will towardes men.

We praise thee, we blesse thee, we worship thee, we glorifie thee, wee geue thanks to thee for thy greate glory, O Lorde GOD, heauenly kyng, God the father almightie.

O Lorde the onely begotten sonne Jesu Christe, O Lorde God, Lambe of GOD, sonne of the father, that takest awaye the synnes of the worlde, haue mercie vpon vs : thou that takest awaye the synnes of the worlde, receiue our praier.

Thou that sittest at the right hande of GOD the father, haue mercie vpon vs : For thou onely art holy, thou onely art the Lorde. Thou onely (O Christ) with the holy Ghoste, art moste high in the glory of God the father. Amen.

Then the priest shall turne him to the people and saye.

The Lorde be with you.

The aunswere.

And with thy spirite.

The Priest.

Let vs praie.

Then shall folowe the Collect of the daie, with one of these two Collectes folowyng, for the Kyng.

ALMIGHTIE God, whose kingdom is euerlasting, and power infinite, haue mercie vpon the whole congregacion, and so rule the heart of thy chosen seruauunt Edward the sixt, our kyng and gouernour : that he (knowyng whose minister he is) maie aboue al thinges seke thy honour and glory, & that we his subiectes (duely consydering whose auctoritie he hath) maye faithfully serue, honour, and humbly obeye him, in thee, and for thee, according to thy blessed word, and ordinaunce: Through Jesus Christe oure Lorde, who with thee, and the holy ghost, liueth, and reigneth, euer one God, worlde without ende. Amen.

ALMIGHTIE and euerlasting GOD, we bee taught by thy holy worde, that the heartes of Kynges are in thy rule and gouernaunce, and that thou doest dispose, and turne them as it semeth best to thy godly wisdom: We humbly beseeche thee, so to dispose and gouerne the hart of Edward the sixt, thy seruauant, our Kyng and gouernour, that in all his thoughtes, wordes, and workes, he maye euer seke thy honour and glory, and study to preserue thy people, committed to his charge, in wealth, peace, and Godlynes: Graunt this, O mercifull father, for thy dere sonnes sake, Jesus Christ our Lorde. Amen.

The Collectes ended, the priest, or he that is appointed, shall reade the Epistle, in a place assigned for the purpose, saying.

Chapiter of to the .

The Minister then shall reade the pistle. Immediately after the Epistle ended, the priest, or one appointed to reade the Gospel, shall saie.

The holy Gospell written in the Chapiter of .

The Clearkes and people shall aunswere.

Glory be to thee, O Lorde.

after the Gospell ended, the priest shall begin.*

I beleue in one God.

The Clerkes shall syng the rest.

The father almightie, maker of heauen and yearth, and of all thinges visible and inuisible: And in one Lorde Jesu Christ, the onely begotten sonne of GOD, begotten of his father before all worldes, God of GOD, light of light, very God of very God, begotten, not made, beeyng of one substaunce with the father, by whom all thinges were made, who for vs men, and for our saluacion, came doune from heauen, and was incarnate by the holy Ghoste, of the Virgin Mary, and was made manne, and was Crucified also for vs vnder Poncius Pilate, he suffered and was buried, and the thirde daye he arose again according to the scriptures, and ascended into heauen and sitteth at the right hande of the father: And he shall come again with glory, to iudge both the quicke and the dead.

And I beleue in the holy ghost, the Lorde and geuer of life, who procedeth from the father and the sonne, who with the father and the sonne together is worshipped and glorified, who spake by the Prophetes. And I beleue one Catholike and apostolike Church. I acknowledge one Baptisme, for the remission of synnes. And I loke for the resurreccion of the deade: and the lyfe of the worlde to come. Amen.

After the Crede ended, shall folowe the Sermon or Homely, or some porcion of one of the Homelyes, as thei shalbe hereafter deuided: wherin if the people bee not exhorted, to the worthy receiuyng of the holy Sacrament, of the bodye & bloude of our sauior Christ: then shal the Curate geue

DERELY beloued in the Lord, ye that mynde to come to the holy Communion of the bodye & bloude of our sauior Christe, must considre what S. Paule writeth to the Corinthians, how he exhorteth all persones diligently to trie & examine themselues, before they presume to eate of that breade, and drinke of that cup: for as the benefite is great, if with a truly penitent heart, and liuely faith, we receiue that holy Sacrament: (for then we spiritually eate the fleshe of Christ, & drinke his bloude, then we dwell in Christ & Christ in vs, wee bee made one with Christ, and Christ with vs) so is the daunger great, yf wee receyue the same vnworthely, for then wee become gyltie of the body and bloud of Christ our sauior, we eate and drinke our owne damnacion, not considering the Lordes bodye. We kyndle Gods wrathe ouer vs: we prouoke him to plague vs with diuerse dyseases, and sondery kyndes of death. Therefore if any here be a blasphemer, aduouterer, or bee in malyce or enuie, or in any other greuous cryme (except he bee truly sory therefore, and earnestly mynded to leaue the same vices, and do trust him selfe to bee reconciled to almightie God, and in Charitie with all the worlde) lette him bewayle his synnes, and not come to that holy table, lest after the taking of that most blessed breade, the deuyll enter into him, as he dyd into Judas, to fyll him full of all iniquitie, and brynge him to destruccion, bothe of body and soule. Judge therfore your selves (brethren) that ye bee not iudged of the lorde. Let your mynde be without desire to synne, repent you truely for your synnes past, haue an earnest and lyuely faith in Christ our sauior, be in perfect charitie with all men, so shall ye be mete partakers of those holy misteries. And aboute all thynges: ye must geue moste humble and hartie thanks to God the father, the sonne, and the holy ghost, for the redempcion of the worlde, by the death and passion of our sauior Christ, both God and man, who did humble him self euen to the death vpon the crosse, for vs miserable synners, whiche laie in darknes and shadowe of death, that he myghte make vs the children of God: and exalt vs to euerlasting life. And to thend that wee should alwaye remembre the excedyng loue of oure master, and onely sauior Jesu Christe, thus dyng for vs, and the innumerable benefites (whiche by his precious bloudshedyng) he hath obteigned to vs, he hath lefte in those holy Misteries, as a pledge of his loue, and a continual remembraunce of the same his owne blessed body, and precious bloud, for vs to fede vpon spiritually, to our endles comfort and consolacion. To him therfore with the father and the holy ghost, let vs geue (as we are most bounden) continual thanks, submittynge our selves wholly to hys holy will and pleasure, and studying to serue hym in true holines and righteousnes al the daies of our life. Amen.

In Cathedral churches or other places where there is dailie Communion, it shal be sufficient to reade this exhortacion aboue written, once in a moneth. And in parish churches, vpon the weke daies it may be lefte vsayed.

¶ And if vpon the Sunday or holy daye, the people be negligent to come to the Communion: Then shall the Priest earnestly exhorte his parishoners, to dispose themselves to the receiuing of the holy communion more diligently, saying these or like wordes vnto them.

DERE frendes, and you especially vpon whose soules I haue cure and charge, on next I do intende, by Gods grace, to offre to all suche as shalbe godlye disposed, the moste comfortable Sacrament of the body and bloud of Christ, to be taken of them, in the remembraunce of his moste fruitfull and glorious Passyon : by the whiche passion, we haue obteigned remission of our synnes, and be made partakers of the kyngdom of heauen, whereof wee bee assured and asserteigned, yf wee come to the sayde Sacrament, with hartie repentaunce for our offences, stedfast faithe in Goddes mercye, and earnest mynde to obeye Goddes will, and to offende no more. Wherefore our duetie is, to come to these holy misteries, with moste heartie thanks to bee geuen to almightie GOD, for his infinite mercie and benefites geuen and bestowed vpon vs his vnworthye seruantes, for whom he hath not onely geuen his body to death, and shed his bloude, but also doothe vouchsaue in a Sacrament and Mistery, to geue vs his sayed bodye and bloud to feede vpon spiritually. The whyche Sacrament beyng so Diuine and holy a thyng, and so comfortable to them whiche receyue it worthilye, and so daungerous to them that wyll presume to take the same vnworthely: My duetie is to exhorte you in the meane season, to consider the greatnes of the thing, and to serche and examine your owne consciences, and that not lyghtly nor after the maner of dissimulers with GOD: But as they whiche shoulde come to a moste Godly and heauenly Banket, not to come but in the mariage garment required of God in scripture, that you may (so muche as lieth in you) be founde worthie to come to suche a table. The waies and meanes ther-to is.

First that you be truly repentaunt of your former euill life, and that you confesse with an vnfained heart to almightie God, youre synnes and vnkyndnes towardes his Maiestie committed, either by will, worde or dede, infirmitie or ignoraunce, and that with inwarde sorowe and teares you bewaile your offences, and require of almightie god, mercie, and pardon, promising to him (from the botome of your hartes) thamendment of your former lyfe. And emonges all others, I am commaunded of God, especially to moue and exhorte you, to reconcile your selves to your neighbors, whom you haue offended, or who hath offended you, putting out of your heartes al hatred and malice against them, and to be in loue and charitie with all the worlde, and to forgeue other, as you woulde that God should forgeue you. And yf any man haue doen wrong to any other: let him make satisfaccion, and due restitution of all landes and goodes, wrongfully taken awaye or with holden, before he come to Goddes borde, or at the least be in ful minde and purpose so to do, as sone as he is able, or els let him not come to this holy table, thinking to deceyue God, who seeth al mennes hartes. For neither the absolucion of the priest, can any thing auayle them, nor the receiuyng of this holy sacrament doth any thing but increase their damnacion. And yf there be any of you, whose conscience is troubled and greued in any thing, lackyng comforte or counsaill, let him come to me, or to some other dyscrete and learned priest, taught in the law of God, and confesse and open his synne and grieve secretly, that he maye receiue suche ghostly counsaill, aduyse and comfort, that his conscience maye be releued, and that of vs (as of the Ministers of GOD and of the church) he may receiue comfort and absolucion, to the satis-faccion of his mynde, and auoyding of all scruple and doubtfulnes: requiryng suche as shalbe satisfied with a generall confession, not to be offended with them that doo vse, to their further satisfyng, the auriculer and secret confession to the Priest: nor those also whiche thinke nedefull or conuenient, for the quietnes of their awne consciences particularly to open their sinnes to the Priest: to bee offended with them that are satisfied, with their humble confession to GOD, and the generall confession to the church. But in all thinges to folowe and kepe the rule of charitie, and euery man to be satisfied with his owne conscience, not iudgyng other mennes myndes or consciences: where as he hath no warrant of Goddes word to the same.

¶ Then shall folowe for the Offertory, one or mo, of these Sentences of holy scripture, to bee song whiles the people doo offer, or els one of them to bee saied by the minister, immediatly afore the offeryng.

In the meane tyme, whyles the Clerkes do syng the Offertory, so many as are disposed, shall offer vnto the poore mennes boxe euery one accordyng to his habilitie and charitable mynde. And at the offeryng daies appoynted: euery manne and woman shall paie to the Curate, the due and accustomed offerynges.

Then so manye as shalbe partakers of the holy Communion, shall tary still in the quire, or in some conuenient place, nigh the quire, the men on the one side, and the women on the other syde. All other (that mynde not to receiue the said holy Communion) shall departe out of the quire, except the ministers and Clerkes.

Then shall the minister take so muche Bread and Wine, as shall suffice for the persons appoynted to receiue the holy Communion, laiying the breade vpon the corporas, or els in the paten, or in some other comely thyng, prepared for that purpose. And puttyng the wyne into the Chalice, or els in some faire or conueniente cup, prepared for that vse (if the Chalice will not serue) puttyng therto a litle pure and cleane water: And setting both the breade and wyne vpon the Alter: Then the Prieste shall saye.

The Lorde be with you.

Aunswere.

And with thy spirite.

Priest.

Aunswere.

We lift them vp vnto the Lorde.

Priest.

Let vs geue thanks to our Lorde God.

Aunswere.

It is mete and right so to do.

The Priest.

IT is very mete, righte, and our bounden dutie that wee shoulde at all tymes, and in all places, geue thanks to thee, O Lorde, holy father, almightie euerlastyng God.

PROPRE PREFACES.

¶ Upon Christmas daie.

BECAUSE thou diddeste geue Jesus Christe, thyne onely sonne to bee borne, as this daye for vs, who by the operacion of the holy ghoste, was made very man, of the substaunce of the Virgin Mari his mother, and that without spot of sinne, to make vs cleane from all synne. Therefore, &c.

¶ Upon Easter daie.

BUT chiefly are we bound to praise thee, for the glorious resurreccion of thy sonne Jesus Christe, our Lorde, for he is the very Pascall Lambe, whiche was offered for vs, and hath taken awaie the synne of the worlde, who by his death hath destroyed death, and by his risyng to life againe, hath restored to vs euerlastyng life. Therefore, &c.

¶ Upon the Ascencion daye.

THROUGH thy most dere beloued sonne, Jesus Christ our Lorde, who after his moste glorious resurreccion manifestly appered to all his disciples, and in their sight ascended vp into heauen, to prepare a place for vs, that where he is, thither mighte we also ascende, and reigne with hym in glory. Therefore, &c.

¶ Upon Whitsondaye.

THROUGH Jesus Christ our Lorde, accordyng to whose moste true promise, the holy Ghoste came doune this daye from heauen, with a sodain great sound, as it had been a mightie wynde, in the likenes of fiery tounge, lightyng vpon the Apostles, to teache them, and to leade them to all trueth, geuyng them bothe the gifte of diuerse languages, and also boldnes with feruent zeale, constantly to preache the Gospell vnto all nacions, whereby we are brought out of darkenes and error, into the cleare light and true knowlege of thee, and of thy sonne Iesus Christ. Therefore, &c.

¶ Upon the feast of the Trinitie.

IT is very meete, righte, and oure bounden duetie, that we should at al tymes, and in al places, geue thanks to thee O Lorde, almighty euerlasting God, whiche arte one God, one Lorde, not one onely person, but three persones in one substaunce: For that which we beleue of the glory of the father, the same we beleue of the sonne, and of the holy ghost, without any difference, or inequalitye, whom the Angels, &c.

After whiche preface shall folowe immediatly.

Therefore with Angels and Archangels, and with all the holy companye of heauen: we laude and magnify thy glorious name, euermore praisyng thee, and saying:

Holy, holy, holy, Lorde God of Hostes: heauen and earth are full of thy glory: Osanna in the highest. Blessed is he that commeth in the name of the Lorde: Glory to thee O lorde in the highest. This the Clerkes shal also syng.

ALMIGHTIE and euerliuyng God, whiche by thy holy Apostle haste taught vs to make prayers and supplicacions, and to geue thanks for al menne: We humbly beseche thee moste mercifully to receiue these our praiers, which we offere vnto thy diuine Maiestie, beseching thee to inspire continually the vniversal church, with the spirite of trueth, vnitie and concorde: And graunt that al they that do confesse thy holy name, maye agree in the trueth of thy holye worde, and liue in vnitie and godly loue. Speciallye we beseche thee to saue and defende thy seruauent, Edwarde our Kyng, that vnder hym we maye be Godly and quietly gouerned. And graunt unto his whole counsaile, and to all that be put in authoritie vnder hym, that they maye truely and indifferently minister iustice, to the punishmente of wickednesse and vice, and to the maintenance of Goddes true religion and vertue. Geue grace (O heauenly father) to all Bishoppes, Pastors, and Curates, that thei maie bothe by their life and doctrine set furthe thy true and liuely worde, and rightely and duely administer thy holy Sacramentes. And to al thy people geue thy heauenly grace, that with meke heart and due reuerence, they may heare and receiue thy holy worde, truely seruyng thee in holynes and righteousnes, all the dayes of their life: And we most humbly beseche thee of thy goodnes (O Lorde) to coumfort and succour all them, whyche in thys transytory life be in trouble, sorowe, nede, syckenes, or any other aduersitie. And especially we commend vnto thy mercifull goodnes, this congregation which is here assembled in thy name, to celebrate the commemoracion of the most glorious death of thy sonne: And here we do geue vnto thee moste high praise, and hartie thanks for the wonderfull grace and vertue, declared in all thy saintes, from the begynning of the worlde: And chiefly in the glorious and moste blessed virgin Mary, mother of thy sonne, Jesu Christe our Lorde and God, and in the holy Patriarches, Prophetes, Apostles and Martyrs, whose examples (o Lorde) and stedfastnes in thy fayth, and kepyng thy holy commaundementes: graunt vs to folowe. We commend vnto thy mercye (O Lorde) all other thy seruantes, which are departed hence from vs, with the signe of faith, and nowe do reste in the slepe of peace: Graunt vnto them, we beseche thee, thy mercy, and euerlasting peace, and that at the day of the generall resurreccion, we and all they which bee of the mysticall body of thy sonne, may altogether be set on his right hand, and heare that his most ioyfull voyce: Come vnto me, O ye that be blessed of my father, and possesse the kingdom, whiche is prepared for you, from the begynning of the worlde: Graunt this, O father, for Jesus Christes sake, our onely mediatour and aduocate.

O God heauenly father, which of thy tender mercie, diddest geue thine only sonne Jesu Christ, to suffre death vpon the crosse for our redempcion, who made there (by his one oblacion once offered) a full, perfect, and sufficient sacrifice, oblacion, and satisfacyon, for the synnes of the whole worlde, and did institute, and in his holy Gospell commaund vs, to celebrate a perpetuall memory, of that his precious death, vntyll his comming again: Heare vs (o merciful father) we besech thee: and with thy holy

spirite and worde, vouchsafe to bl^xesse and sanc^xtifie these thy gyftes and creatures of bread and wyne, that they maie be vnto vs the bodye and bloude of thy moste derely beloued sonne Jesus Christe. Who in the same nyght that he was betrayed: tooke breade, and when he had blessed, and geuen thanks: he brake it, and gaue it to his disciples, sayng: Take, eate, this is my bodye which is geuen for you, do this in remembraunce of me.

priest shall take the

Likewyse after supper he toke the cuppe, and when he had geuen thanks, he gaue it to them, sayng: drynk ye all of this, for this is my bloude of the newe Testament, whyche is shed for you and for many, for remission of synnes: do this as oft as you shall drinke it in remembraunce of me.

still to the Altar, without any eleuacion, or shewing the Sacrament to the people.*

WHEREFORE, O Lorde and heauenly father, accordyng to the Instytucion of thy derely beloued sonne, our sauour Jesu Christ, we thy humble seruantes do celebrate, and make here before thy diuine Maiestie, with these thy holy giftes, the memoryall whyche thy sonne hath wylled vs to make, hauing in remembraunce his blessed passion, mightie resurreccyon, and glorious ascension, render yng vnto thee most hartie thanks, for the innumerable benefites procured vnto vs by the same, entierely desir yng thy fatherly goodnes, mercifully to accepte this our Sacrifice of praise and thanks geuing: most humbly beseching thee to graunt, that by the merites and death of thy sonnē Jesus Christ, and through faith in his blood, we and al thy whole church, may obteigne remission of our sinnes, and all other benefites of hys passyon. And here wee offre and present vnto thee (O Lorde) oure selfe, oure soules, and bodies, to be a reasonable, holy, and liuely sacrifice vnto thee: humbly beseeching thee, that whosoever shalbee partakers of this holy Communion, maye worthely receiue the moste precious body and bloude of thy sonne Jesus Christe: and bee fulfilled with thy grace and heauenly benediction, and made one bodye with thy sonne Jesu Christe, that he maye dwell in them, and they in hym. And although we be vnworthy (through our manyfolde synnes) to offre vnto thee any Sacryfice: Yet we beseeche thee to accepte this our bounden duetie and seruice, and commaunde these our prayers and supplicacions, by the Ministry of thy holy Angels, to be brought vp into thy holy Tabernacle before the syght of thy dyuine maiestie: not waiying our merites, but pardonyng our offences, through Christe our Lorde, by whome, and with whome, in the vnitie of the holy Ghost: all honour and glory be vnto thee, O father almightie, world without ende. Amen.

Let vs praye.

AS our sauour Christe hath commaunded and taught vs, we are bolde to saye. Our father whyche art in heauen, halowed be thy name. Thy Kyngdome come. Thy wyll be doen in yearth, as it is in heauen. Geue vs this daye our dayly breade. And forgeue vs our trespases, as wee forgeue them that trespasse agaynst vs. And leade vs not into temptacion.

The aunswere.

But deliuer vs from euill. Amen.

Then shall the priest saye.

The peace of the Lorde be alwaye with you.

The Clerkes.

And with thy spirite.

The Priest.

CHRIST our Pascall lambe is offred vp for vs, once for al, when he bare our sinnes on hys body vpon the crosse, for he is the very lambe of God, that taketh away the sinnes of the worlde: wherfore let vs kepe a ioyfull and holy feast with the Lorde.

Here the priest shall turne hym toward those that come to the holy Communion, and shall saye.

YOU that do truly and earnestly repent you of your synnes to almightie God, and be in loue and charitie with your neighbors, and entende to lede a newe life, folowyng the commaundementes of God, and walkyng from hencefurth in his holy wayes: drawe nere and take this holy Sacrament to your comforte, make your humble confession to almightie God, and to his holy church here gathered together in hys name, mekely knelyng vpon your knees.

Then shall thys generall Confession bee made, in the name of al those that are minded to receiue the holy Communion, eyther by one of them, or els by one of the ministers, or by the prieste hymselfe, all kneeling humbly vpon their knees.

ALMYGHTIE GOD, father of oure Lord Jesus Christ, maker of all thynges, iudge of all men, we knowlege and bewaile our manyfold synnes and wyckednes, which we from tyme to tyme, most greuously haue committed, by thought, word and dede, agaynst thy diuine maiestie, prouoking moste iustly thy wrath and indignacion against vs, we do earnestly repent and be hartely sory for these our misdoinges, the remembraunce of them is greuouse vnto vs, the burthen of them is intollerable: haue mercye vpon vs, haue mercie vpon vs, moste mercifull father, for thy sonne our Lorde Jesus Christes sake, forgeue vs all that is past, and graunt that we may euer hereafter serue and please thee in neunes of life, to the honor and glory of thy name: Through Jesus Christe our Lorde.

ALMIGHTIE GOD our heavenly father, who of his great mercie, hath promysed forgeuenesse of synnes to all them, whiche with hartye repentaunce and true fayth, turne vnto him: haue mercy vpon you, pardon and delyuer you from all youre sinnes, confirme and strengthen you in all goodnes, and bring you to euerlasting lyfe: through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Then shall the Priest also say.

Heare what coumfortable woordes our sauour Christ sayeth to all that truely turne to him.

Come vnto me all that trauell and bee heauy laden, and I shall refreshe you. So God loued the worlde that he gaue his onely begotten sonne, to the ende that al that beleue in hym shoulde not perishe, but haue lyfe euerlasting.

Heare also what saint Paul sayeth.

This is a true saying, and woorthie of all men to bee receiued, that Jesus Christe came into thys worlde to saue sinners.

Heare also what saint John sayeth.

If any man sinne, we haue an aduocate with the father, Jesus Christ the righteous, and he is the propiciation for our sinnes.

Then shall the Priest turnyng him to gods boord knele down, and say in the name of all them, that shall receyue the Communion, this prayer folowing.

WE do not presume to come to this thy table (o mercifull lord) trusting in our owne righteousness, but in thy manifold and great mercies: we be not woorthie so much as to gather vp the cromes vnder thy table, but thou art the same lorde whose propertie is alwayes to haue mercie: Graunt vs therfore (gracious lorde) so to eate the fleshe of thy dere sonne Jesus Christ, and to drynke his bloud in these holy Misteries, that we may continually dwell in hym, and he in vs, that oure synfull bodyes may bee made cleane by his body, and our soules washed through hys most precious bloud. Amen.

Then shall the Prieste firste receiue the Communion in both kindes himselfe, and next deliuer it to other Ministers, if any be there presente (that they may bee ready to helpe the chiefe Minister) and after to the people.

And when he deliuereth the Sacramente of the body of Christe, he shall say to euery one these woordes.

The body of our Lorde Jesus Christe whiche was geuen for thee, preserue thy bodye and soule vnto euerlasting lyfe.

And the Minister deliuering the Sacrament of the bloud, and geuing euery one to drinke once and no more, shall say.

The bloud of our Lorde Jesus Christe which was shed for thee, preserue thy bodye and soule vnto euerlasting lyfe.

If there be a Deacon or other Priest, then shal he folow with the Chalice: and as the priest ministreth the Sacrament of the body, so shal he (for more expedicion) minister the Sacrament of the bloud, in fourme before written.

In the Communion tyme the Clarkes shall syng.

ii. O lambe of god that takeste away the sinnes of the worlde: haue mercie vpon vs.

O lambe of god that takeste away the synnes of the worlde: graunt vs thy peace.

Beginning so soone as the Prieste doeth receyue the holy Communion: and when the Communion is ended, then shall the Clarkes syng the post Communion.

Sentences of holy scripture, to be sayd or song euery daye one, after the holy Communion, called the post Communion.

selfe, and take vp his crosse and folowe me.

Whosoeuer shall indure vnto thende, he shalbe Mar. xiii.

Praysed be the Lorde god of Israell, for he hath Luc. i. visited and redemed hys people: therefore let vs serue hym all the dayes of our lyfe, in holines and righteousnes accepted before hym.

Happie are those seruauntes, whome the Lord Luc. xii.

and hath not prepared himself, neither hath doen according to his will, shalbe beaten with many stripes.

- John. iiii. The howre cummeth and now it is, when true woorshippers shall wurship the father in spirite and trueth.
- John. v. Beholde, thou art made whole, sinne no more, lest any wurse thing happen vnto thee.
- John. viii. If ye shall continue in my woorde, then are ye my very disciples, and ye shall knowe the truth, and the truth shall make you free.
- John. xii. While ye haue lighte, beleue on the lyght, that ye may be the children of light.
- John. xiii. He that hath my commaundementes, and kepeth them, the same is he that loueth me.
- Iohn. xiiii. If any man loue me, he will kepe my woorde, and my father will loue hym, and wee will come vnto hym and dwell with hym.
- John. xv. If ye shall byde in me, and my woorde shall abyde in you, ye shall aske what ye will, and it shall bee doen to you.
- Iohn. xv. Herein is my father gloryfied, that ye beare muche fruite, and become my disciples.
- John. xv. This is my commaundement, that you loue together as I haue loued you.
- Roma. viii. If God be on our syde, who can be agaynst vs? which did not spare his owne sonne, but gaue him for vs all.
- Rom. viii. Who shall lay anything to the charge of Goddes chosen? it is GOD that iustifyeth, who is he that can condemne?
- Rom. xiii. The nyght is passed, and the day is at hande, let vs therfore cast away the dedes of darkenes, and put on the armour of light.
- i. Corin. i. Christe Jesus is made of GOD, vnto vs wisdom, and righteousnes, and sanctifying, and redempcion, that (according as it is written) he whiche reioyceth shoulde reioyce in the Lorde.
- i. Corin. iii. Knowe ye not that ye are the temple of GOD, and that the spirite of GOD dwelleth in you? if any manne defile the temple of GOD, him shall God destroy.

Ye are derely bought, therfore glorifye God in i. Corin. vi. your bodies, and in your^e spirites, for they belong to God.

Be you folowers of God as deare children, and Ephes. v. walke in loue, euen as Christe loued vs, and gaue hymselfe for vs an offering and a Sacrifyce of a sweete sauoure to God.

Then the Priest shall geue thanks to God, in the name of all them that haue communicated, turning him first to the people, and saying.

The Lorde be with you.

The aunswere.

And with thy spirite.

Let vs pray.

ALmightyE and euerlyuyng GOD, we moste hartely thanke thee, for that thou hast vouchsafed to feede vs in these holy Misteries, with the spirituall foode of the moste precious body and bloud of thy sonne, our sauour Jesus Christ, and hast assured vs (duely receiuing the same) of thy fauour and goodness toward vs, and that we be very membres incorporate in thy Misticall bodye, whiche is the blessed companie of all faythfull people: and heyres through hope of thy euerlasting kingdome, by the merites of the most precious death and passion, of thy deare sonne. We therfore most humbly beseche thee, O heauenly father, so to assist vs with thy grace, that we may continue in that holy felowship, and doe all suche good woorkes, as thou hast prepared for vs to walke in, through Jesus

Christe our Lorde, to whome with thee, and the holy goste, bee all honour and glory, world without ende.

Then the Priest turning hym to the people, shall let them depart with this blessing.

The peace of GOD (whiche passeth all vnderstandyng) kepe your heartes and mindes in the knowledge and loue of GOD, and of hys sonne Jesus Christe our lorde. And the blessing of God almightie, the father, the sonne, and the holy gost, be emonges you, and remayne with you alway.

Then the people shall aunswere.

Amen.

Where there are no clerkes, there the Priest shall say al thinges appoynted here for them to sing.

When the holy Communion is celebrated on the worke-day, or in priuate howses: Then may be omitted, the Gloria in excelsis, the Crede, the Homily, and the exhortacion, beginning.

ASSIST vs mercifully, O Lord, in these our supplications and praiers, and dispose the way of thy seruantes, toward the attainment of euerlasting saluacyon, that emong all the chaunges and chaunces of thys mortall lyfe, they may euer bee defended by thy moste gracious and readye helpe: throughe Christe our Lorde. Amen.

O ALMIGHTIE Lorde and euerlyuyng GOD, vouchesafe, we beseeche thee, to direct, sanctifye and gouerne, both our heartes and bodies, in the wayes of thy lawes, and in the workes of thy commaundementes: that through thy most mightie protection, both here and euer, we may be preserued in body and soule: Through our Lorde and sauour Jesus Christ. Amen.

GRAUNT we beseche thee almightie god, that the wordes whiche we haue hearde this day with our outwarde eares, may throughe thy grace, bee so grafted inwardly in our heartes, that they may bring foorth in vs the fruite of good liuing, to the honour and prayse of thy name: Through Jesus Christe our Lorde. Amen.

PREUENT vs, O lorde, in all our doinges, with thy most gracious fauour, and further vs with thy continuall helpe, that in al our woorkes begonne, continued and ended in thee: we may glorifye thy holy name, and finally by thy mercy obtaine euerlasting life. Through, &c.

ALMIGHTIE God, the fountayn of all wisdom, which knowest our necessities beefore we aske, and our ignoraunce in asking: we beseche thee to haue compassion vpon our infirmities, and those thynges whiche for our vnwoorthines we dare not, and for our blindnes we can not aske, vouchsaue to geue vs for the woorthines of thy sonne Jesu Christ our Lorde. Amen.

ALMIGHTIE god, which hast promised to heare the petitions of them that aske in thy sonnes name, we beseche thee mercifully to inclyne thyne eares to vs that haue made nowe our prayers and supplicacions vnto thee, and graunte that those thynges whiche we haue faythfullye asked accordyng to thy will, maye effectually bee obteyned to the reliefe of oure necessitye, and to the setting foorth of thy glorye: Through Iesus Christ our Lorde.

For rayne.

O GOD heauenly father, whiche by thy sonne Iesu Christ hast promised to al them that seke thy kingdom, and the righteousnes thereof, al thinges necessary to the bodely sustenance: send vs (we beseche thee) in this our necessitie, such moderate rayne and showers, that we may receiue the frutes of the earth, to our comfort and to thy honor: Through Iesus Christ our Lord.

O LORDE God, whiche for the sinne of manne didst once drowne all the worlde, except eight persons, and afterwarde of thy great mercye, didste promise neuer to destroy it so agayn: We humbly beseche thee, that although we for oure iniquities haue woorthelye deserued this plague of rayne and waters, yet vpon our true repentaunce, thou wilt sende vs suche wether wherby we may receiue the frutes of the earth in due season, and learne both by thy punishment to amende our liues, and by the graunting of our petition, to geue thee prayse and glory: Through Iesu Christ our Lorde.

¶ Upon wednesdaies and frydaies, the English Letany shalbe said or song in all places, after suche forme as is appoynted by the kynges maiesties In-iuncions: Or as is or shal bee otherwyse appoynted by his highnes. And thoughe there be none to communicate with the Priest, yet these dayes (after the Letany ended) the Priest shall put vpon hym a playn Albe or surplesse, with a cope, and say al thinges at the Altar (appoynted to bee sayde at the celebracyon of the lordes supper)

untill after the offertory. And then shall adde one or two of the Collectes afore written, as occasion shall serue by his discrecion. And then turning him to the people shall let them depart, with the accustomed blessing.

And the same order shall be used all other dayes, whensoever the people be customably assembled to pray in the churche, and none disposed to communicate with the Priest.

Lykewyse in Chapelles annexed, and all other places, there shalbe no celebracion of the Lordes supper, except there be some to communicate with the Priest. And in suche Chapelles annexed where y^e people hath not bene accustomed to pay any holy bread, there they must either make some charitable provision for the bering of the charges of the Communion, or elles (for receyuyng of the same) resort to theyr Parish Churche.

For aduoyding of all matters and occasyon of dyscencyon, it is mete that the breade prepared for the Communion bee made through all thys realme after one sort and fashion: that is to say, unleauened, and rounde, as it was afore, but without all maner of printe, and some thyng more larger and thicker then it was, so that it may be aptly deuided in diuers pieces: and euery one shall be deuided in two pieces, at the leaste, or more, by the discrecion of the minister, and so distributed. And menne muste not thynke lesse to be receyued in parte, then in the whole, but in eache of them the whole body of our sauour Jesu Christ.

Wyne for the holy Communion (as oft as theyr Parishioners shalbe disposed for theyr spiritual comfort to receyue the same) it is therefore ordred, that in recompence of suche costes and charges, the Parishoners of euerye Parishe shall offer euery Sondag, at the tyme of the Offertory, the iuste valour and price of the holy lofe (with all suche money, and other thinges as were wont to be offered with the same) to the vse of theyr Pastours and Curates, and that in suche ordre and course, as they were woont to fynde and pay the sayd holy lofe.

Also, that the receiuing of the Sacrament of the blessed body and bloud of Christ, may be most agreable to the institucion therof, and to the usage of the primatiue Church: In all Cathederall and Collegiate Churches, there shal alwaies some Communicate with the Prieste that ministreth. And that the same may bee also obserued euery where abroad in the countrey: Some one at the least of that house in euery Parishe, to whome by course after the ordinaunce herein made, it apperteyneth to offer for the charges of the Communion, or some other whom they shall provide to offer for them, shall receiue the holye Communion with the Prieste: the whiche may be the better doen, for that they knowe before, when theyr course commeth, and maie therefore dispose themselues to the worthie receiuyng of the Sacramente. And with hym or them who doeth so offre the charges of the Communion: all other, who be then Godly disposed thereunto, shall lykewyse receiue the Communion. And by this meanes the Minister hauyng alwaies some to communicate with him, maie accordingly solempnise so high and holy misteries, with all the suffrages and due ordre appoynted for the same.

And the Priest on the weke daie shall forbear to celebrate the Communion, except he haue some that will communicate with hym.

Furthermore, euery man and woman to be bound to heare and be at the diuine seruice, in the Parishe churche where they be resident, and there with deuout prayer, or Godlye silence and meditacion, to occupie themselues. There to paie their dueties, to communicate once in the yeare at the least, and there to receyue, and take all other Sacramentes and rites, in this booke appoynted. And whoso-euer willyngly vpon no iust cause, doeth absent themselues, or doeth vngodly in the Parishe churche occupie themselues: vpon proffe therof, by the Ecclesiasticall lawes of the Realme to bee excommunicate, or suffre other punishment, as shall to the Ecclesiastical iudge (accordyng to his discrecion) seme conuenient.

And although it bee redde in aunciente writers, that the people many yeares past, receiued at the priestes handes, the Sacrament of the body of Christ in theyr owne handes and no commaundement of Christ to the contrary: Yet forasmuche as they many tymes conueyghed the same secretelye awaye, kept it with them, and diuersly abused it to supersticion and wickednes: lest any suche thyng hereafter should be attempted, and that an vniformitie might be used, throughoute the whole Realme: it is thought conuenient the people commonly receiue the Sacrament of Christes body, in their mouthes, at the Priestes hande.
